

Congress cuts security funds for synagogues

BY JOE ANUTA

State Assemblyman Rory Lancman (D-Fresh Meadows) took Congress to task this week for cutting funding to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security that goes toward beefing up security at Queens synagogues and other nonprofits at risk for terrorist attacks.

Lancman spoke outside of the Israel Center for Conservative Judaism, on 73rd Avenue in Elmhurst.

"I was shocked and disappointed," Lancman said, rattling off several synagogues in his district that had previously taken advantage of the funding.

The cut came out of a political impasse that was resolved in December, when funding for the department and other federal agencies was set to run out. The U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate hashed out an agreement at the 11th hour for the remainder of this fiscal year, which lasts until October.

The resulting agreement cut funding from $19 million to $10 million, which Lancman said had a serious impact on Queens organizations.

Last year, 270 organizations nationwide used the grants to upgrade their security. They used the money to install surveillance

The Glendale community was shocked by a standoff between a neighborhood man and police Sunday night that required the evacuation of the surrounding residential buildings and ended in his suicide.

Mark Vasquez, 34, of 70th Avenue and 68th Street in Glendale, shot at NYPD officers and then barricaded himself inside his apartment's bathroom before shooting himself in the chest, authorities said.

The tragic standoff lasted for a little more than three hours. Evacuated neighbors stood in the brisk early spring night behind police tape as a helicopter whirled overhead.

"We've never had anything like this," said a 79-year-old neighbor who gave her name as Marie. "This is horrible."

The owner of the building, who declined to give her name, said the situation started when Vasquez's wife left him. After leaving the apartment, the wife called the apartment owner and told the owner her husband was not coherent and, if the police arrived, to let them in.

"When they came, I gave them the key," the owner said. "They went upstairs and that's when all hell broke loose."

NYPD officers arrived at the house at around 6:30 p.m., after which Vasquez fired upon them, police said. The officers were not

Sunnyside intersection once site of stadium and ‘Winged Fist’ athletes

BY REBECCA HENELY

Where apartments and car-filled streets now stand in Sunnyside, there was once a grand stadium, Celtic Park, that produced some of the greatest Olympic champions.

With Saturday’s unveiling of Winged Fist Way, a street co-named for 43rd Street and 48th Avenue, City Councilman Jimmy Van Bramer (D-Sunnyside) and historian Ian McGowan hope the stadium and those athletes will never be forgotten.

“This is a recognition that is long, long overdue,” U.S. Rep. Joseph Crowley (D-Jackson Heights) said.

About 70 people turned out for the street renaming to honor the Irish-American Athletic Club, an athletic and cultural organization whose members won 50 Olympic medals from 1900 to 1924. The club often practiced in the athletic field called Celtic Park, which stood on 7 acres between what is now 42nd and 49th streets and 48th and 50th avenues. The symbol of the organization was a winged fist.

“Today is a celebration and an acknowledgement of our town and its wonderful history,” Van Bramer said.

Celtic Park was razed in 1930 to make room for an apartment complex of the same name, but in its heyday it was a popular gathering spot for Irish Americans, who would come to watch track-and-field stars, like five-time Olympic gold medalist Martin Sheridan.

McGowan said alcohol would be sold out of a “hotel” on the premises that had no rooms but could circumvent the blue laws banning the sale of beer at sporting events on Sundays.

“He would be the sponsor of Vitamin Water today,” Crowley said of Sheridan’s accomplishments.

The club was Irish American in name only. It produced Dr. John Baxter Taylor Jr., the first black Olympic gold medalist, and Polish-Jewish runner Abel Kiviat. Other members included Germans, Norwegians and Bohemians.

“This is a great story of western Queens no matter what your ethnicity,” said state Sen. Michael Gianaris (D-Astoria), who is Greek American and was one of the few speakers without Irish heritage at the event.

McGowan, who lives in the Celtic Park apartment complex and studies the Irish diaspora, created the Winged Fist Organization in 2008 to salute the club’s legacy after the Celtic Park co-op board refused to put up a plaque to honor the club.

The board declined to comment on its reasoning.

McGowan said he will be putting his ceremonial sign for the street in his window.

“I have not given up in my efforts to have a plaque up here,” McGowan said.

Crowley and Community Board 2 Chairman Joseph Conley said they supported McGowan in his future efforts.

“We really could not understand why the building refused to honor our history,” Conley said.

Big Six Towers kids want buses restored

BY REBECCA HENELY

City Councilman Jimmy Van Bramer (D-Sunnyside) held a rally last Thursday with Big Six Towers residents protesting the lack of bus service for children of the Woodside apartment complex to PS 229.

The councilman and others say this decision, made in 2010, has forced students in Grades 3 to 6 to walk across Laurel Hill Boulevard and 61st Street, which the adults characterize as a dangerous intersection where multiple accidents have occurred.

“I am as outraged today as I was the day they announced it,” Van Bramer said.

PS 229, at 67-25 51st Road, is on the Woodside and Maspeth border, less than a mile away from Big Six at Queens Boulevard and 61st Street, which makes it ineligible for bus service.

But the quickest way to get to the school is through an intersection of the north side of Laurel Hill Boulevard, the east and west sides of 61st Street north of the boulevard and where 61st Street becomes a two-way street beneath the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway.

Big Six residents once had a waiver for bus service, but city Department of Education spokeswoman Marge Feinberg said all school-wide waivers have been done away with, although parents can request them individually for their children.

“We conducted a thorough review as a result of eliminating the school-wide waiver,” Feinberg said. “The review determined that the intersection over which concern has been expressed has both a traffic signal and a sidewalk along the underpass.”

Yet residents say the spot can be scary to navigate, especially for a child. Tom Haggerty, a member

LaGuardia CC panel looks at immigrant entrepreneurs

Newcomers' businesses need help on financing, marketing, legal issues rather than capital: Survey

BY REBECCA HENELY

While running a business can be challenging for immigrants, Reshma Saujani of the city public advocate's office said last Thursday they are often not aware of the many resources available to them.

"People aren't necessarily looking for capital," Saujani said. "They're looking for things to help them sustain their business."

Saujani's talk was part of the Center for an Urban Future and the Fund for Public Advocacy's forum on the unique challenges facing immigrant business owners at LaGuardia Community College, at 31-10 Thomson Ave., last Thursday.

Saujani shared the results of a survey of immigrant entrepreneurs' needs while Queens business owners discussed their experiences.

"We have to find better ways to create awareness," said Paul Quintero, chief executive officer of microfinance loaner Accion USA. "We have to go out to businesses. They can't come to us."

Saujani said the Fund for Public Advocacy and Accion surveyed 625 businesses across the city, 31 percent of which were in Queens, that earned under a million dollars. She said 92 percent of those surveyed did not receive help, but 79 percent wanted assistance in financing, legal assistance or marketing.

She said in response to the survey the advocacy fund would be going on a listening tour of businesses in the five boroughs. It will also be doing initiatives such as partnering with technology companies and offering technical assistance to businesses — 87 percent of immigrant businesses in the city do not have a website — as well as creating and distributing a tool kit of services available to businesses.

"I'm excited about what we're going to do to make change and actually create jobs in this city," Saujani said.

On the panel, Samantha Bailey-Champagne, a principal at a public accounting firm who co-managed a Golden Krust restaurant in Jamaica, described the borough as not business-friendly. She said the sales tax is a problem, the regulations are difficult to understand and entrepreneurs are lacking in education.

Nevertheless, she said her neighborhood has possibilities.

"We see lots of potential and lots of growth that can happen in Jamaica," Bailey-Champagne said.

Yiorgos Samios, who sells a garlic dip out of Long Island City's entrepreneur space that is now available in several stores, including Whole Foods, said one pitfall is knowing how to best spend capital when businesses begin.

"People have great ideas," he said. "They have $30,000, $50,000. They don't know how to spend it."

Quintenero said there are four main challenges to immigrants: they often do not have credit history, the culture can be hard to navigate and they may be slow to trust services that were untrustworthy in their own country such as banks, they do not have a stable business community and may feel lonely working on their own and the credentials they had often do not carry over.

"It doesn't matter what your credentials are outside the United States," he said. "It matters what your credentials are here."

Mourners stand against guns

Hundreds remember Darryl Adams as arrests in SE Queens multiply

BY JOE ANUTA

The more than 1,000 people who filled up a Rochdale church Monday night were there for two reasons. The first was to pay their final respects to Darryl Adams, the 18-year-old who was murdered earlier this month in South Jamaica. The second was to take a stand against gun violence, as police added another charge against a member of the group the NYPD contended carried out Adams' murder.

The day after the funeral, tensions between family members of Adams and police ran high when a group gathered in a neighborhood park and several people, including Adams' two brothers were arrested and his mother taken to the hospital, according to community activists.

But the night before the community stood united during the service for Adams at New Jerusalem Baptist Church at 122-05 Smith St.

"They took my heart from me," said Adams' mother, Shanta Merritt, speaking softly during the funeral.

Merritt could barely talk, and friends and family often broke down while trying to describe the young basketball player who hoped to get a SUNY basketball scholarship.

But Merritt said she was pleasantly surprised at the throngs of people who showed up at the funeral.

"I don't even know some of you all," she said with a laugh.

On March 2 at about 12:30 a.m., shots rang out near South Jamaica Houses, or the Forties Projects, and a surveillance camera captured Adams running down the sidewalk and collapsing. Two figures then entered the frame. One of them raised a gun and shot Adams while he was down, according to the tape.

As word spread of Adams' death, the family began receiving an outpouring of support from all of southeast Queens, accord-

Boro lawmaker hopes guy vetoes district lines

BY JOE ANUTA

The state Legislature drafted bills for a new set of maps that would define political boundaries in the state Assembly and state Senate for the next decade, but Queens lawmakers were still hopeful Gov. Andrew Cuomo would veto them.

An initial proposal for the new lines in the Assembly and Senate was released earlier this year. While the Assembly lines did not generate much controversy, the Senate lines did — and Sen. Michael Gianaris (D-Astoria) said the second and final iteration is 98 percent the same as the first, which sent the borough into an outrage when they were released.

"The maps are almost identical to the first set, which had been deemed the most gerrymandered in the history of the state," he said.

One change between the first and second versions of the senate lines put Gianaris back into the district he currently lives in, as opposed to that of state

Sen. Jose Peralta (D-East Elmhurst). The two were originally drawn into the same district and might have been pitted against each other.

But the same was not true for Sens. Toby Stavisky (D-Whitestone) and Tony Avella (D-Bayside). Their homes are currently drawn into the same district, which could mean they will face off in a primary. Another change in the Senate lines put Bay Terrace into the 11th Senate District which is currently held by Avella, as opposed to the 16th Senate District currently held by Stavisky.

"We're really happy with that," said Warren Schreiber, president of the Bay Terrace Community Alliance. "It just puts us in an area of common interest."

And the 16th Senate District remained a majority Asian district, pleasing the Asian American Community Coalition on Redistricting and Democracy, which has been advocating for such a seat based on communities of interest in

Jamaica NAACP fights upstate seat

BY RICH BOCKMANN

NAACP and southeast Queens leaders gathered outside Queens Borough Hall Monday, calling on Gov. Andrew Cuomo to veto a proposal by the state Legislature to add a 63rd state Senate seat upstate, a move they said would dilute the voting power of everyone downstate, regardless of race.

"We stand in total and absolute opposition to the LATFOR redistricting proposal for New York state," said NAACP Jamaica Branch President Leroy Gadsden. "We fail to understand how the LATFOR panel can add and create a new district upstate in an area that experienced a decrease in population."

Despite the fact New York City and Long Island have gained population proportionally to the rest of the state, the legislature has proposed adding a 63rd Senate seat in the Hudson Valley.

Gadsden said the proposal flew in the face of the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. Constitution's 14th Amendment and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, and was reminiscent of the voter disenfranchisement struggles of the civil rights era.

"Just say, 'No.' Veto this proposal," he said.

Former St. Albans City Councilman Archie Spigner said the plan was devised to preserve the state GOP's power in the Senate.

"The Republicans are trying to do with the new math what they can't do with the population," he said.

Gadsden added he wanted to remind Cuomo of his vow to veto any proposal put forth by LATFOR and said the governor was beholden not to legislators

Holi inspires Rich Hill with flying colors

Annual Hindu parade celebrating passage of seasons draws kaleidoscope of jubilant onlookers

BY REBECCA HENELY

Spring — and dyed power — was in the air in Richmond Hill Sunday as thousands of South Asians and others came to celebrate the 24th annual Phagwah Parade.

Phagwah, also called Holi, is a festival marking the arrival of spring. For years in Richmond Hill, the Indo-Guyanese population has celebrated with a parade that ends at Phil “Scooter” Rizzuto Park.

During the parade and in the park, the riders on the floats and spectators coat each other with colored powder meant to represent the flowers of spring.

“Every year it keeps getting bigger,” said Shanta Khemchaub, owner of Flowers by Shanta at 130th Street and Liberty Avenue.

The parade route began this year at Liberty Avenue and 133rd Street and continued westward along Liberty Avenue to 125th Street, ending at the park on 95th Avenue. The floats, most of which were from temples across the city although some represented businesses, blasted traditional music while their riders yelled out “Happy Phagwah! Happy Holi! Happy Spring!”

When the parade reached its conclusion at the park, the flurries of powder coated the air as celebrants smeared colored dust and sometimes sprayed purple dye on each other.

Alladdin Moe, 40, came from Park Slope to celebrate Phagwah and rated the festivities 11 on a scale of one to 10.

“I’m not that religious, but it’s a celebration to ring in the new year, to ring in the spring,” Moe said.

Many of the parade-goers were from Guyana and waved the red, black, yellow, white and green flag of the country, but other celebrants came from Trinidad and Tobago, India and Suriname, and some were not South Asian at all.

South Asian ambassadors and Queens elected officials spoke during the festivities. Dr. Neil Parsan, ambassador from Trinidad and Tobago, said he was happy to see so many young people enjoying the holiday.

Bayney Karran, Guyanese ambassador to the United States, said Holi was about spring and about doing away with past enmities. He said the parade was a testament to the strength and unity of the community.

“Whether you are Hindu or non-Hindu, let us celebrate the principles of Phagwah,” Karran said.

The Queens officials said they were proud to represent the South Asian community in Richmond Hill.

“Everybody looks so beautiful and colorful,” said City Councilwoman Elizabeth Crowley (D-Mid-

DEP seeks green infrastructure for Newtown Creek sewer woes

The city wants actual plants in the concrete jungle and is seeking companies to build green infrastructure in central and western Queens neighborhoods that will help clean some of the borough’s toxic waterways.

Feds bust heroin connection from Woodhaven to Nassau

BY REBECCA HENELY

After a nine-month investigation, 20 suspected members of a Woodhaven-based heroin ring were indicted in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday, the U.S. attorney’s office said.

In response to an increase in heroin use on Long Island, the FBI teamed up with the NYPD, Nassau County Police, Suffolk County Police and U.S. Marshals Service, the office said. After the probe called “Operation County Connection” they found a network run by a group known as the Perez Organization based in Woodhaven, the office said.

The authorities seized heroin with a street value of more than $30,000 and thousands of dollars in cash, the FBI said.

The 20 defendants indicted in the ring range in age from 21-year-old college student Kathryn Pappas to 68-year-old retired Suffolk County Marine Bureau Police Officer Roland Stern, the office said.

Others indicted include a married couple, 29-year-old Tina and 24-year-old Matthew Catrini, and Dana Sollectio, 23, who is charged with selling heroin in her family’s Masapequa, L.I., restaurant’s parking lot, the office said.

“The charges and arrests announced today have ended the activities of an alleged heroin distribution organization whose members were drawn from a variety of backgrounds but were united by a common cause,” said U.S. Attorney Loretta Lynch for the Eastern District, “profiting personally while endangering the lives of so many residents in our communities.”

The office said the ring centered its operations in Woodhaven, although it had distribution networks in Nassau and Suffolk counties. It also had storage facilities in Queens, Brooklyn and Roosevelt, N.Y., the office said.

The alleged members were indicted through the use of hours of wiretaps,

Blighted properties targeted by Qns task force

BY JOE ANUTA

A northeast Queens lawmaker has made a list of derelict or vacant properties around the area that he wants to clean up, including a Flushing home owned by Bank of America that was being used as an illegal apartment. But there is only so much he can do to stop the problems.

After civic organizations, state Sen. Tony Avella (D-Bayside) and City Councilman Dan Halloran (R-Whitestone) helped coerce a negligent property owner in Whitestone to clean up a site along Francis Lewis Boulevard, Avella's office began compiling a list of other abandoned properties that need to be addressed.

He created a task force in conjunction with civics in the area and came up with an initial roster of 21 properties that are either uninhabited or in various degrees of disrepair.

"We are going to look at all of these sites," he said. "Do we need to give the city more legislative power, or are they just not doing anything?"

A TimesLedger Newspapers analysis of the properties found that some have been shut down for dangerous conditions or housing illegal apartments.

A property owned by Bank of America, at 43-19 164th St. in Flushing, was issued an order to vacate by the city Department of Buildings after inspectors found the two-family dwelling was being used as a single-room occupancy facility that housed three or four families, according to DOB documents.

Three single-room occupancy rooms with locks on their doors were found by inspectors, and in a separate complaint an illegal apartment was also found in the basement. On Feb. 12, Bank of America was set to appear in a city Environmental Control Board Court, which addresses hazardous building conditions separate from the state Unified Court System, but the lender did not show up and currently owes a total of $65,000 in outstanding violations, according to the DOB database.

Another property on the list is owned by Chuk Sau Tsnag. It is a construction site that currently has a stop-work order placed on it that has generated 33 complaints since 2007. Tsnag racked up $20,000 in fines from the city for violations like not securing the site with a proper fence.

Halloran, too, is looking out for derelict properties like the vacant lot at 195-20 Northern Blvd., which also has a stop-work order placed on it and $12,500 in fines associated with it.

Avella said unattended property can bring health risks like vermin and mosquitoes or bring down property values of neighboring real estate.

"These locations shouldn't go on for decades, and the city should have the power to say, 'If you can't develop the property, we'll issue sanitation fines or health fines, we're going to put it up for a lien sale,'" Avella said. "How many times do we have to go onto a piece of property before we begin to realize there is a problematic owner?"

But some of the lots on the list are in various stages of development or are completely legal yet uninhabited homes, which the city has no power to address.

An abandoned gas station, at 79-05 Little Neck

Pkwy. in Glendale, is slowly being developed into a 7-11, according to DOB documents.

Neighbors have submitted complaints to the DOB about a vacant house at 120-15 9th Ave. in College Point since 2001, but each time the DOB inspectors go out the house is secured and thus legal.

Avella's crusade against these properties pits a neighborhoods' rights to cleanliness against a homeowners' rights to be a slob.

A construction site, at 146-45 22nd Ave., was issued a stop-work order and currently owes tens of thousands of dollars in fines.

Richard Golden, a lawyer in Forest Hills familiar with property law and foreclosures, said the city has always been limited on the steps it can take, unless a property becomes a public nuisance, a health hazard or the owner fails to pay taxes.

"For the homeowner, it is real estate law. He has a deed to the property that gives him ownership," Golden said. "Just because it is dilapidated, there is not much the city can do."

For Avella, he has not decided exactly how far a property can sink before it falls on the community to correct the problem.

"I haven't come to that point. Where do you draw the line?" Avella said. "I think we have to figure out the philosophy of where that line is and when something becomes a longtime nuisance."

Workers reminded of rights to safety

BY REBECCA HENELY

State Assemblymen Rory Lancman (D-Fresh Meadows) and Francisco Moya (D-Jackson Heights) told immigrants at Make the Road New York's Corona office last week that if they are working in a hazardous or discriminatory environment, they can get recourse regardless of their legal status.

"Our laws are here to keep them safe," Lancman said.

The Fresh Meadows-based assemblyman is the chairman of the Assembly Subcommittee on Workplace Safety and Moya is the representative for Corona, where the immigrant advocacy group Make the Road has its Queens offices, at 92-10 Roosevelt Ave.

At a news conference last Thursday, both assemblymen tried to impress upon the audience that they did not need to fear going to the authorities for help if they had a problem involving safety or discrimination.

Lancman said immigrants experience problems more often due to language barriers and fear of retaliation.

"They have a right to a safe workplace," Lancman said. "They have a right not to be discriminated against in any way."

The conference was meant to kick off Lancman's second weekend of what is to be an annual event to raise awareness of workers' rights and places they can go for help. This year's event will run from Sept. 15 to Sept. 16, and during it legislators will be partnering with groups across the state in immigrant communities.

Lancman said that in his capacity as workplace safety chairman he hears many stories of immigrants being treated unfairly in many different types of fields, from construction to service industry.

Moya, an Ecuadorian American, said his office also hears many cases of immigrants being paid off the books. Since his district, which covers parts of Jackson Heights, Corona and Elmhurst, has a large Latino population, Moya said being a Latino himself has opened up an avenue of trust between him and his constituents.

"We know what it means to live in fear," Moya said. "We know what it means to take whatever job we can get because we need to provide for our family."

Deborah Axt, of Make the Road New York, praised the assemblymen not only for their work on this issue, but also their advocacy on other immigrant issues like the Wage Theft Prevention Act, which requires employers to spell out wages in writing, and the Dream Fund, which businesses pay into to create a fund for the children of immigrants who have grown up in the United States to help them go to college.

Reporter Colvin mourned

Astoria-born correspondent killed while covering uprising in Syria

BY DON MULLEN

OYSTER BAY, L.I. — More than 200 mourners filled St. Dominic Roman Catholic Church Monday for the funeral of war correspondent Marie Colvin, killed in Syria while covering the attacks by army troops on defenseless civilians.

TV cameras from all the networks were lined up on a lawn across the street as the high mass began with a bagpiper playing "Amazing Grace" and six pallbearers carrying her casket into the church.

Colvin's mother Rosemarie, sisters Eileen and Catherine and brothers William and Michael followed as a soloist began the hymn "Be Not Afraid."

The Sunday Times of London correspondent was killed Feb. 22 when the building that served as a makeshift media center in the village of Homs was struck by a Syrian army mortar. Colvin's body was finally recovered and flown home earlier this month.

Born in Astoria, Colvin grew up on Long Island. She was 56.

The high mass was heard by a crowd of more than 200 mourners, including executives and staff from the London Sunday Times. News Corp. Chairman Rupert Murdoch, who owns the Sunday Times, attended along with members of the media from many parts of the world.

It was a moving service, with readings from some of Colvin's friends, one of them saying God "gave her a voice for the voiceless" and another reading from 2 Timothy: "I have fought the good fight to the end: I have run the race to the finish."

After the funeral, mourners were invited to the Crescent Club in nearby Bayville on Long Island Sound for a buffet lunch.

nearby East Norwich, was a graduate of Oyster Bay High School and Yale University. After a stint working at a trade magazine, she joined United Press International in New York in the early 1980s, earning laurels as an enterprising reporter, and transferred to the news agency's Washington bureau.

She became UPI's bureau chief in Paris, traveling to Libya in 1986 to cover the U.S. bombing of Tripoli in retaliation for the nation's support of terrorists.

She moved to the Sunday Times later that year.

In her years with the Sunday Times, she covered conflicts around the world, chronicling the toll taken on the innocent victims of combat in Europe, including Kosovo, and more recently the Middle East, where spontaneous uprisings pressing for democratic reform swept Tunisia, Egypt, Libya and then Syria.

Long before her death, she was widely extolled as the greatest war reporter of her generation.

At her wake Sunday, mourners passed by a portrait of Colvin by a Sri Lankan artist. She lost her left eye in 2001 in that country's civil war and had worn her signature black eye patch since then.

A group of Sri Lankans gathered outside the church Monday to remember her courageous reporting from their war-torn country with placards saying, "Uncrowned queens of intrepid journalists."

COMMUNITY IGNORED IN SCHOOL CLOSURE PLAN

Despite criticism, the city Department of Education is moving forward with its plan to close “struggling” neighborhood schools and reopen them in the same building with new names.

In western Queens, the DOE is targeting Grover Cleveland High School in Ridgewood and William Cullen Bryant HS in Astoria. The schools will close at the end of the school year and reopen as “new schools” in the fall. The plan is maddening and opposed by nearly every elected official and the communities that these schools serve.

This is a show put on in order to receive federal School Improvement Grants. The Panel for Education Policy is scheduled to vote April 26 on whether or not to close these and other schools. The PEP has never voted against the wishes of the puppet master at City Hall.

What sense do the closings make? If these schools are not performing up to the standards set by the DOE, then find out why and make the changes that need to be made. This will require investing more money into the schools and making certain teachers have the textbooks and equipment they need to deliver a quality education. The DOE plan to close and reopen schools will also require a substantial investment.

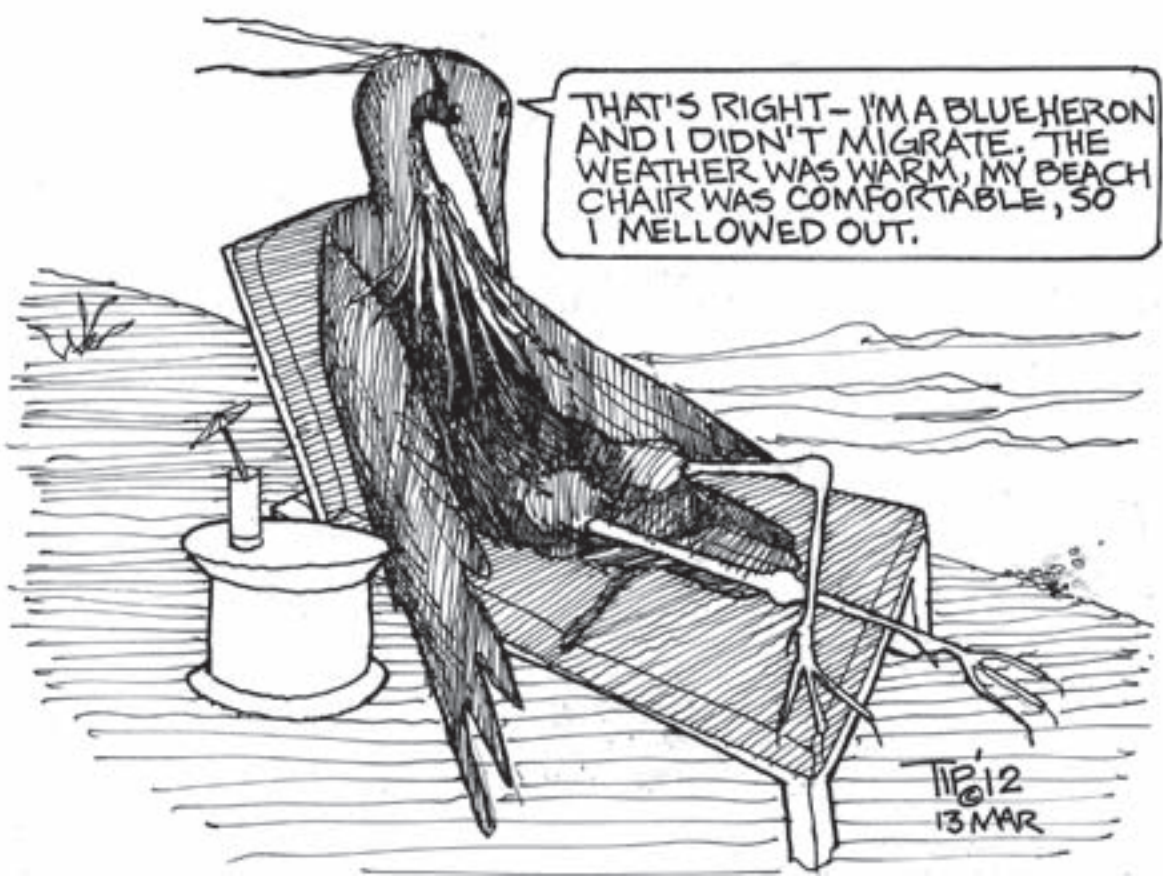

The DOE needs to look at class sizes, infrastructure and the challenges faced by students in each of these schools. It may be that the administrations need to be changed and some teachers may need to be trained. After years of neglect, it is infuriating the DOE has decided to destroy schools.

The last time the DOE held a public meeting in Brooklyn to discuss this approach, the people who could squeeze in were so angry the DOE officials could not be heard. But the officials did not get the message that the parents with children in the targeted schools are mad as hell.

The United Federation of Teachers is opposed to the plan. Sadly, the Bloomberg administration has never listened to or shown respect for the teachers’ union.

A spokesman for City Councilwoman Elizabeth Crowley said her office was “totally opposed” to closing Grover Cleveland HS and would be working with Gov. Andrew Cuomo and city Schools Chancellor Dennis Walcott to keep it open.

Good luck.

Standardized tests hamper pupil learning

In Bob Friedrich’s March 1-7 On Point column “Underperforming Queens schools should be shuttered,” the author misses the point about the objections to the extreme emphasis on standardized test preparation in our local public schools.

As parents like me are aware, the city Department of Education’s continual focus on test scores, to the exclusion of all that is meaningful in education, has been a disaster for the students of eastern Queens. Incessant test preparation drills have deadened the curriculum and made standardized tests a ceiling rather than a floor for what goes on in too many classrooms.

Friedrich says complaints of this nature stem from the United Federation of Teachers, but as a father who is in our public schools all the time, I know it is local parents who have deep concerns about how constant test preparation detracts from the real learning children should be doing.

I have spoken to hundreds of parents about this issue, and I have yet to find one who supports the test preparation obsession.

Using tests to evaluate student achievement is reasonable, but allowing the tests to drive instruction and dominate classroom activity is not.

New Yorkers deserve non-political, redistricted lines

On Feb. 7, I testified at the state Legislative Task Force on Demographic Research and Reapportionment hearing at Queens Borough Hall regarding the proposed state Assembly and state Senate districts. After waiting more than four hours to testify, I gave my testimony to a commission that seemed uninterested in my thoughts.

Here is the text of my testimony:

"In 1987, as a young political science undergraduate student at the University at Albany, I wrote a paper whereby I suggested that New York state implement a system of independent redistricting of state and congressional districts.

"At the time, the state of Iowa was the only state with such a system. Today, in the year 2012, I would like to thank LATFOR for unquestionably proving the thesis of my college paper. LATFOR, by proposing these lines, has shown the citizens of New York state that our government in Albany is incapable of controlling itself and the New York state Senate and Assembly are incapable of representing their constituents and instead are more interested in political self-dealing and political self-preservation.

"The district lines proposed by LATFOR are despicable. Over the years, The Brennan Center for Justice has called our New York state government the 'most dysfunctional' state government in the nation. The district lines we are discussing today are prima facie evidence that this dysfunction is still alive and well.

"In a state where it seems that every week another elected official in Albany is either indicted or convicted, it is time for our legislators to show some interest in good government. Albany has become a cesspool of corruption. The lines that have been produced by LATFOR have clearly been designed to protect incumbents from being challenged, to protect the majorities held in each house of the Legislature and to punish the political enemies of the minority party of each house. This is no way to resolve the dysfunction that pervades our state government.

"In 2010, when I was a candidate for New York state Assembly, I signed a pledge to a group led by former Mayor Ed Koch that, if elected, I would support independent redistricting. Nearly every member of the Senate and the Assembly also signed such a pledge. Where is the independent redistricting you promised? Do you have to make it so obvious that your word means nothing?

"The New York state Constitution establishes that districts must be 'in as compact form as practicable.' Does anyone in his or her right mind believe that these districts are 'compact' in any sense of the word? These lines represent a 'complete departure' from any understanding of compactness, using the words of the 1972 decision in Schneider v. Rockefeller (31 N.Y.2d 420, 430). The citizens of New York deserve districts that are compact.

"The state constitution also requires that state legislative districts be composed of 'contiguous territory.' A contiguous district is one in which it is possible to travel from any point in the district to any other point in the district without crossing the district boundary. Historically, LATFOR has twisted this idea of contiguity using highways and inaccessible shorelines to connect unrelated towns and neighborhoods into one district. The citizens of New York deserve districts that are contiguous.

"New York State districts are also supposed to be drawn with great deference to county and municipal boundaries. In Queens, special deference should also be paid to our distinct neighborhoods. The lines drafted by LATFOR clearly have not given deference to such boundaries. Districts have been drafted to cross boundaries for nothing other than political gain. The citizens of New York deserve districts that show deference to county, municipal and neighborhood boundaries.

"So where does that leave us today? Since we are up against the time constraints brought about by the upcoming primaries, LATFOR must literally go back to the drawing board and draft new lines that not only follow the New York state Constitution, but also draft lines that are not politically motivated and will show the rest of the nation that New York is no longer interested in being the most dysfunctional government in the nation.

"If this proves impossible for the Legislature, then Gov. Cuomo must veto the districts. Frankly, a court-drawn map is better than a politically motivated, gerrymandered map drawn by LATFOR.

"Going forward, New York state needs to pass a constitutional amendment taking control over the redistricting process away from the Legislature and giving it to an independent commission. Many states, including Iowa, can serve as the model. Independent commissioners should be appointed from a pool of qualified candidates and no district lines should be drawn based upon the party enrollment of the voters or of the incumbent legislators. Districts should be compact; contiguous; give deference to county, municipal boundaries, neighborhood boundaries; and continue the protections of the U.S. Constitution and of the Voting Rights Act.

"It is time that New York state changes its dysfunctional ways and starts a path towards good government and reform. The first step towards that goal should now be independent redistricting. With these district lines, LATFOR is aiding and abetting our state's dysfunction.

It's time for the citizens of New York to stand up and say, 'Enough is enough.' We want good government now."

CB 7 did right voting against Mormon church Pols destroy Flushing

I am writing in response to your Feb. 9-15 editorial "Fairness a Stranger at CB 7."

I am amused at how you belittled Community Board 7 for denying a waiver for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to build a facility in the middle of a residential neighborhood. The fact of the matter is that CB 7 did its job by protecting the community it serves.

Granting three waivers would set a terrible precedent, regardless of whether it is a house of worship or not. What would be the purpose of the North Flushing rezoning if the members of the community board would rubber stamp all types of facilities — regardless of whether they are appropriate for the surrounding neighborhood or not.

North Flushing has been besieged by developers over the past decade and the vote by the CB 7 members is a result of this frustration. Members of the community have had enough of developers and regardless of whether they build residential, commercial or religious facilities.

In fact, I am concerned with the tone you take in your editorial, that "[Borough President Helen] Marshall and the BSA should reverse CB 7's decision" and grant the waivers. Are you suggesting our elected officials should ignore the will of the people? The process, which is already weighed heavily against homeowners, is designed to protect the rights of the community that these changes will affect.

I applaud CB 7 for standing up for the rights of the homeowners who would potentially be negatively affected by the granting of permission to build this facility in the middle of a residential block.

While you state that the "community boards and Marshall should encourage Queens development," perhaps you can send us your address. It appears that you are more than willing to have this 23,420-square-foot monstrosity built in your neighborhood — although I imagine your neighbors would not be so pleased either.

I have a feeling you and your neighbors would not be so against the due process the community board follows if this happened to be built next to your home.

Merchants leaving Union Street because Flushing Commons will be bad for business is just the tip of the iceberg ("Merchants leaving Union Street," Flushing Times, Feb. 23-29).

The Willets Point proposal with luxury high rises, upscale shopping and a convention center, together with traffic nightmares on the Van Wyck Expressway, Grand Central Parkway and Northern Boulevard, will spell the end of all small businesses in the downtown Flushing area, as well as an extremely congested residential area beyond the congestion that currently exists.

The fault for this abomination rests with Mayor Michael Bloomberg, Borough President Helen Marshall and the myopic City Council members whose primary constituents are the real estate moguls and not the poor, middle class and small business owners.

Hopefully, term limits may breathe fresh air into our governing process.

Planned changes in district lines create interesting races

When you were a child, did anyone give you a kaleidoscope as a gift? For those of you who are not familiar with kaleidoscopes, they are similar to a small telescope, but when you twist the rim on the top, you get variations of many different colorful designs formed into intricate geometrical patterns. Each twist forms a different pattern and no two are alike. The possibilities are endless.

Why the reference to kaleidoscopes? Because that is what politics in general and Queens politics in particular are turning out to be. A case in point was last Thursday at Cathy Nolan's fund-raiser at Dazies.

Rory Lancman announced he was going to announce the next day his candidacy for Bob Turner's congressional seat. In Thursday's late paper, however, they said they were going to combine Joe Crowley's and Turner's seats into one.

There was no way Lancman could beat Queens Democratic leader Crowley for his congressional seat. So instead, Lancman hinted he might challenge Gary Ackerman for his seat. Now that scenario, if it happens, will be one interesting race to watch!

While Council members, assembly members and senators are required to live in the district they are running in, it appears rules are different for Congress and anyone can run in any district. If they should win, are they then required to move into that district? I don't know for sure, but I'm positive someone will inform us on the correct rules and regulations.

Speaking of upcoming political races, it would seem that if the new lines remain the same, that would then put both Sens. Tony Avella and Toby Stavisky in the same district, thereby pitting them against each other. As both senators are apparently represented by the Parkside Group, I wonder how that will play out. It looks like there may be many interesting things about to happen on the Queens political horizon.

On March 7, I was invited to a cocktail reception for Jim Wrynn at Harbor Lights at the South Street Seaport. The event was packed like sardines. It seems that after serving a number of years at the state Department of Financial Services, Jim has decided to return to private practice. He will now be connected with the Goldberg-Segalla law firm.

It has offices in Philadelphia, New York City, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Albany, White Plains, Garden City, Princeton, Hartford and Long Island. With those many locations, it sounds like a most impressive firm. Good luck to you, Jim. I'm sure you will contribute to your new firm all the accomplishments you provided for the state.

It was an interesting party. While there I had occasion to speak with Steve Levy, Esq. Levy, if you recall, was the Democratic executive of Suffolk County. Somehow or other, the Queens GOP managed to convince him to change his party registration and reregister as a Republican. If he did, they would support him to run for governor. Well, we all know how that turned out!

On New Year's Day, Levy was replaced by Democrat Steve Bellone, the current Suffolk executive. During the course of the evening, Levy gave me his card. He is now president and CEO of his own consulting firm. He is an attorney and served eight years in the Suffolk Legislature, where I'm sure he has made many solid contacts. Good luck, Steve!

The Samuel Field Y, in partnership with the Central Queens Y, held a business partnership breakfast at the Douglaston Manor March 6. They had a good turnout for that event.

That evening, the Long Island City Chamber of Commerce held a meeting in the Penthouse Bar and Restaurant at the Long Island City Ravel Hotel. What beautiful views of the New York skyline from all the windows, but what a place to find. It's the best-kept secret in Queens unless you have been there before and know exactly where you're going.

That's it for this week.

I look forward to your voice mails at 718-767-6484, faxes at 718-746-0066 and e-mails at deerrichard@aol.com.

Be sure to check out the Focus on Queens page.

Till next week, Dee.

Too much emphasis put on evaluating teachers' performance

William Lewis
Political Action

In 2001, Mayor Michael Bloomberg made it known he was going to take steps to abolish the city Board of Education and take it over himself and run it with the assistance of an appointed city schools chancellor.

At the time, it seemed the new mayor had enough to do in running the city without adding on public school education to his workload, considering that he himself had no background or credentials in public education.

The concept of a board of education is traditional in the United States, with almost every state, city and town having one. Bloomberg, however, thought he could do a better job. The fact is that, based on statistical data, there are shortfalls in student performance with the city education system.

Bloomberg was not going to take the responsibility for an ineffective education system, so the easiest way out was to blame teachers. To emphasize that, he constantly called for more teacher evaluations. In addition, he has called out for shutting eight Queens high schools, thereby replacing teachers with new instructors. Will this really improve education, especially if the new instructors have little experience?

It is difficult at best to implement an equal evaluation system for teachers, given the difference in the type of students they are getting today. A significant number of students from the poorer sections of the city are from dysfunctional families and live in crime-ridden environments. Some cannot speak English well, which detracts from their learning ability.

When these types of students are compared with middle-class students from a stable social environment, there will usually be a wide difference in learning capacity regardless of how teachers perform.

As previously said, academic education is not for everyone. Vocational trades being taught by our public schools, as they were in the 1950s and '60s, would be a more practical way of dealing with the situation. If the city would try to give this educational opportunity to high school and possibly middle school students, it could go a long way toward improving city educational standards.

According to the new evaluation system, 31 percent of a teacher's rating is based on observations by school administrators and 40 percent on state tests given to students. It would seem an instructor who received a good rating by observation would also see his or her students do well on state tests.

If a teacher, however, received a good observation grade and his or her students still did poorly on the state tests, what then? How is an overall evaluation to be given under these circumstances? Too much emphasis is being given to teacher evaluations and not to other factors.

Regarding one important aspect of this situation is the crime problem in city schools. To cite some data at John Bowne High School in Flushing in 2009, out of a student body of about 3,000 students, 509 serious infractions occurred. At JHS 162, in the Bushwick section of Brooklyn in 2009, there were 369 serious disruptions during that school year.

In the school year 2005-06, figures from the state Department of Education indicate the following pertaining to crimes in city schools: assaults with physical injury, 5,084; sexual offenses, 948; robbery, 267; arson, 210.

With a situation like this, how is a teacher expected to teach effectively or a student expected to learn. There are more school safety officers on duty in city schools than there are guidance counselors. At various high schools around the city, we see police cars parked near schools.

Years ago, during the middle of the 20th century, these environments would have been almost unthinkable. A teacher's job today is more difficult than it ever was. Before the focus is put on teacher evaluations, other factors should be considered.

Astoria cab driver says rider went berserk in Conn.: Cops

BY REBECCA HENELY

A Morgan Stanley executive pleaded not guilty in Connecticut Superior Court Friday to attacking a New York City cab driver when the cabbie asked for his $204 fare for driving him from Manhattan to his home in Darien, Conn.

The New York Post identified the driver as Mohamed Ammar of Astoria.

"He was drunk and out of control, and he could have killed me," Ammar told the Post. "That was one of the scariest moments of my life."

William Bryan Jennings faces charges of assault, intimidation due to bias and larceny in connection with the Dec. 22 incident, according to the Connecticut courts' website.

The Darien Police Department said Jennings agreed to pay Ammar $204, the city Taxi and Limousine Commission driver's rate for the approximately 40-mile drive, before they left the city Dec. 22.

But when they got to Jennings' house, the banker allegedly refused to pay and an argument began, Darien police said.

Ammar tried to call the police, but when he could not find a signal to call 911 on his cell phone, he tried to drive to the center of town to find an officer, Darien police said. As Ammar was driving away, Jennings allegedly took a pen knife out and stabbed at Ammar through the open partition, causing injuries to Ammar's hand that required stitches, Darien police said.

Jennings allegedly also said to Ammar, "I'm going to kill you, you should go back to your country!" the Stamford Advocate reported.

After the alleged attack, Ammar drove to the side of the road and called 911.

The Morgan Stanley banker contacted the police two weeks after the incident and was arrested Feb. 29, Darien police said. He paid a $9,500 cash bond and was released on bail, Darien police said.

Jennings has claimed he was afraid he was being abducted and acted in self-defense, the Stamford Advocate reported.

Ammar told the Post he does not feel safe after the incident.

"This has been a problem for all cabdrivers," Ammar told the Post. "You have no control my over who you pick up. I regret letting him into cab."

hurt and did not return fire, but took cover while Vasquez locked himself in his apartment, police said. Those who lived in the surrounding apartments were evacuated as an EMS hostage negotiation team responded, police said.

The owner said Vasquez's attack was a shock and that he seemed like a friendly, normal person.

"I never had a problem with him," she said.

Vasquez did not take any hostages, although rumors circulated among neighbors that he had. In addition to those in the house, neighbors in nearby dwellings were asked to leave their homes. They stood out in the cold and dark while officers taped off streets between Central and Otto avenues and 67th to 68th places.

old neighbor Karol Urban said around 8 p.m.

Police said they had attempted to make contact with Vasquez when he was barricaded but were unable to do so. A camera was used to locate Vasquez in the apartment, and they found him inside the bathtub in the bathroom, police said.

When the officers entered at 10:10 p.m., they found Vasquez dead with a gunshot wound to the chest.

A neighbor, who declined to give her name, said she had never seen a situation like the standoff and suicide Sunday night.

"I guess it happens everywhere," she said. "It just didn't happen before."

said 15 children are also already able to take the bus to PS 229 in the morning.

"Please put the kids on the bus," Haggerty said. "It's as simple as that. No money needs to be expended here."

Van Bramer said he was calling on the DOE to reconsider the decision in light of the accidents that have occurred at the intersection.

"We cannot wait until a child is hurt," he said.

Residents said they had witnessed bad accidents and been in some of them themselves. Kathy Lally said residents' cars parked on the northwest corner have sustained damage from collisions.

"It's very dangerous," Lally said. "I saw an accident over here a couple of weeks ago."

Doris Stroman, who has a 6-year-old and a 14-year-old, said she was once in an accident at the intersection while driving with her children. She was driving her minivan when an 18-wheeler blew the red light and hit her.

"I'm still suffering the ill effects," she said. "It's terrible."

cameras, security doors or hiring additional staff, Lancman said.

This year, according to Lancman, only 150 are set to receive the grants.

"This money has been critically important," he said.

U.S. Rep. Bob Turner (R-Middle Village) voted for the appropriations bill in the House, which was passed largely along party lines.

Turner did not respond to a request for comment by press time.

The grants can be used by any nonprofit, but Lancman discussed what he called the heightened risk of attack that synagogues operate under on a daily basis.

"I would ask people who are not involved in Jewish cultural life to appreciate the omnipresent threat of violence and harassment," he said. "The intensity ebbs and flows, but it is omnipresent."

As an example, he cited a 2009 plot to bomb synagogues in Riverdale, the Bronx, which was foiled by a federal agent who helped the men who were convicted hatch the plan.

And on a yearly basis

during the high holidays, the NYPD always increases security around synagogues to deal with any potential threats, Lancman said.

While the security upgrades would not do much for identifying terrorist threats, Lancman said they might deter potential attackers.

The NYPD has recently been in hot water over its policy of infiltrating Muslim student groups and mosques, and the New York Civil Liberties Union has called for a federal investigation.

NYPD Commissioner Ray Kelly has defended his actions, calling them necessary in the NYPD's attempts to foil attacks against the city.

And in a Tuesday Quinnipiac poll, New Yorkers were found to support the NYPD by a 2-to-1 margin and largely back Kelly and Mayor Michael Bloomberg on crime fighting.

Lancman said he supports the NYPD's policy of gathering information about potential terrorist threats, although he said it must be done within the bounds of the U.S. Constitution.

He also said the security upgrades could have an ancillary benefit of catching vandals and thieves who have hit synagogues and mosques throughout Queens and Brooklyn in recent months.

In November, swastikas were spray painted on two libraries and on the walls of Congregation Tifereth Israel of Jackson Heights in East Elmhurst.

Dangerous fake pot should be outlawed: Wills

BY RICH BOCKMANN

At a number of bodegas in southeast Queens, customers can legally purchase a product that produces a marijuana-like high, but while the weed may be fake, the dangerous side effects are real.

Basheer Ahmed, manager of the Bashir Famous Deli in Rochdale, Friday became the first to sign City Councilman Ruben Wills' (D-Jamaica) pledge to ban from his store's shelves synthetic marijuana, a product ostensibly sold as an herbal incense, but one critics say teens and young adults are smoking to get high.

"This is a problem that's become increasingly more pervasive in our community," said Wills, who stood outside the shop on the corner of Guy R. Brewer Boulevard and 140th Avenue, along with fellow Councilman James Sanders (D-Jamaica) and state Assemblywoman Vivian Cook (D-Jamaica) to announce their plan to rid their neighborhoods of the products.

Sold under names such as "Spice," "K2," "Blaze" and "Red X Dawn," these products consist of plant material that has been coated with chemicals that mimic THC, the active ingredient in marijuana.

Addiction expert Herman Lozada said the chemicals were originally made in labs to do research on animals and can produce side effects in humans such as hallucinations, heart palpitations, paranoia and aggression.

He said they are not regulated by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and marked "not for human consumption," adding that packaging that often depicts cartoon characters leaves little to question about whom they are being marketed to.

"It doesn't smell like marijuana, and because it doesn't smell kids are getting away with it," he said.

Wills said he was working on legislation that would criminalize the sale and possession of synthetic marijuana as well as introducing a resolution in support of a federal bill that would do the same.

"What we've done is not just a legislative approach, but a common-sense, grassroots approach," he added.

The councilman also made signs that store owners can display in their windows, pledging not to sell synthetic marijuana. A survey conducted by Wills in December found 12 out of 58 bodegas in southeast Queens selling the fake pot.

"Some had it on the shelf, but didn't know what it was," he said. "To their credit, if ignorance can be a credit, many of them don't know what they're selling."

Others, he said, know what they are selling. The councilman accused shop owners of price gouging, noting the price of a package that cost $5 in December now costs $8.

Public transit ridership grows along with higher pump prices

BY PHILIP NEWMAN

A billion more people nationwide took public transportation last year than in 2000, according to a transportation advocacy agency.

The American Public Transportation Association said Americans took 10.4 billion trips on subways, light rail systems, buses and commuter trains in 2011.

It was the second-highest annual ridership on public transit since 1957.

"Two top reasons for the increased ridership are higher gasoline prices and, in certain areas, a recovering economy with more people returning to work," said APTA President Michael Melaniphy.

"Since 60 percent of trips taken on public transportation are for work commutes, it's not surprising to see ridership increase in areas where the economy has improved," Melaniphy said.

The nonprofit said ridership on public transit was up 2.4 percent from the prior year.

"The largest rate of growth was in rural communities with populations under 100,000, where public transit use showed an increase of 5.4 percent," Melaniphy said.

Schumer adds tax break for transit riders to bill

BY PHILIP NEWMAN

The tax break for New York City's beleaguered straphangers that once seemed as gone as the subway token may be back and $10 richer.

U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) has campaigned tirelessly for the tax benefit, which offered transit riders $230 per month in tax-exempt income until it expired Dec. 31.

Schumer said he has inserted a condition in a federal highways bill restoring the transit riders full benefit — it had been slashed to $125 — adding $10 and making it effective immediately.

Under the program, employers can deduct funds before taxes from employees' paychecks for savings of a third or more in riders' transportation costs. At this time, half a million commuters in the metropolitan area take advantage of the benefit and 2.7 million nationwide.

"Many people thought that the benefit of such help to New Yorkers was dead," Schumer said. "It is not. 'If the [U.S.] House [of Representatives] acts the way the Senate will, we can restore it."

It was not renewed in its original form when it expired Dec. 31, and Schumer said the reason was several "Tea Party candidates from rural areas who don't have mass transit" were to blame.

If passed, the benefits to public transit riders would be $240 a month, equal to the IRS tax benefit that covers parking.

End-of-life cancer pain spreads from the patient to every member of the family. For this very reason, Calvary Hospital is the model for delivering palliative care to terminally ill patients, and also world-renowned "family care". From our special social workers – known at Calvary as "Family Care Practitioners" – to our doctors, nurses, cancer care technicians... to our recreational therapists, Family Care personnel, clergy, nutritionists, bereavement specialists, administration and support staff...the family members are embraced with love, compassion, care and non-abandonment with often needed hugs and companionship. Going Green in Queens

Weekly harvests feed Queens

BY TAMMY SCILEPPI

Flushing is going green, offering fresh local, organic food to Queens' "green-deprived" residents. It recently announced its Community Supported Agriculture partnership with Golden Earthworm Organic Farm on Long Island.

Part of a growing trend, CSA is a mutual agreement between local farmers and community members who pay the farmer a fee in advance to cover production costs. Offering weekly harvest shares of fruits and vegetables, the farm promises to provide key features of sustainability as well as fair food, labor and environmental practices.

Living a sustainably-savvy lifestyle, Kristin Allocco, 27, a longtime resident of Bayside, works as education coordinator at the Queens County Farm in Floral Park, where she loved to go as a child. Her job description focuses on teaching about sustainable agriculture and colonial times to adults and kids. She also teaches dance and fitness.

"Golden Earthworm Organic Farm has partnered with several neighborhoods in Queens, including Flushing and Douglaston. Residents of these areas can join the CSA and pay a fee upfront for produce for the year. Members then pick up weekly shares of food brought to them directly from this farm" Allocco said. "Weekly shares vary by season, but each week there will be a bag full of different types of produce. Food is available for pickup on Tuesday evenings at Alley Pond Environmental Center between 5 p.m. and 7:30 p.m."

Golden Earthworm Organic Farm is certified organic CSA farm on the North Fork of Long Island's east end, serving more than 1,500 member group in the communities of Queens and Long Island.

Vegetables are certified organic, while fruit is non-certified organic but responsibly grown. "The Flushing CSA is a wonderful way to try foods only available by season. Supporting local CSA's helps us support local farmers and move away from our dependence on unsustainable factory farms,” said Allocco.

Let’s face it. We live in a time when pesticides, preservatives, and radiated food products are a fact of life. There seems to be an ongoing battle between organic vs. the other stuff. When we see the word “organic,” we tend to think “expensive” or “exclusive.” Paradoxically, this way of eating is actually simpler and healthier, more wholesome and literally of the earth.

Perhaps we’re not convinced that organic really means all natural – after all, how do we really know? Some people don’t trust it, claiming it’s a sinister marketing tool. Others will only buy hormone-free milk and dairy products, cage-free eggs, and organic produce if they can find it at a local fruit stand or greenmarket.

“In urban areas, there tends to be a disconnect between food and farming. It’s hard to imagine how important it is to purchase local food when we can’t see where it comes from,” Allocco said. “The Flushing CSA brings the farm a little closer to home. People tend to think of organic as being overpriced, but the Flushing CSA is affordable and breaks down to about $11.00 per week for fresh, organic produce.”

Growing up, Allocco said she just assumed all food came from farms like her grandparents’ in Manorville, L.I., where the living green expert and her sister would fill empty Maxwell House Coffee cans with juicy peaches and fat strawberries — always coming home with bags full of fruits and vegetables.

“I had the best of both worlds: On weekends, we visited my grandparents in the country and I was able to pick peaches and ride on tractors. Meanwhile, at home we were just a short train ride to Manhattan.”

“My mom taught me a lot about sustainability, although I didn’t realize it at the time. She is incredibly creative and we always used the resources we had available to us. A lot of that came from the community.”

She pointed out that eating locally grown food means Queens residents can eat fresh produce that does not contain chemicals and does not require the heavy use of fuel to transport it to the consumer, which cuts down emissions.

The Queens County Farm Museum offers a farm stand from June 1 through the end of October. It’s open Wednesday through Sunday, between noon and 5 p.m.

Discover the power of composting at home

BY ALAN KRAWITZ

For the uninitiated, compost is a nutrient-dense material that improves soil health and provides essential nutrients to plants. Compost is a product of the natural decomposition process that transforms nutrients from once-living materials into humus, the rich, organic component of soil.

While the transformation of organic materials is a fairly complex process, it generally involves the introduction of micro and larger organisms, such as bacteria, fungi, worms, and mites into the compost pile to initiate the natural decomposition process.

The compost pile is generally composed of a combination of food scraps and plant waste. Some of the major benefits of composting include keeping waste out of city landfills as well as helping to benefit community and resident gardens as well as contributing to overall lawncare and landscaping practices.

"Composting in Queens is definitely increasing. Our workshops are always very well-attended," says Gina Baldwin, project manager for the NYC Compost Project in Queens hosted at the Queens Botanical Garden. "People are very interested in composting their food scraps, among lots of other things."

The project, created by the city's Department of Sanitation in 1993, is a five-borough endeavor funded by the agency's Bureau of Waste Prevention, Reuse and Recycling.

Baldwin's mission involves spreading the gospel regarding compost into various Queens' neighborhoods, including schools, community gardens, public housing projects and co-ops. "People either come to us or we go to them," Baldwin explains. The project offers a range of workshops to teachers and children as well as technical assistance to homeowners and other residents interested in composting.

Noting that there are more single-family homes in Queens than most of the other boroughs, Baldwin says she finds more community gardens in western Queens and more homeowners in eastern Queens. But the common bond is that all are interested in composting.

"Composting is very engaging for people who want to make a difference," Baldwin says. "There is much problem-solving involved. We find that it helps bring communities together and it's also a good team-building exercise as well."

She adds, "You have to work together when you're composting in a housing complex or any location where many people live in one place."

In Queens, numerous city agencies and nonprofit organizations have benefited from receiving NYC Compost. Those agencies and organizations include The Bowne House, Creedmoor Psychiatric Center, Queens Botanical Garden, NYC Housing Authority, Forest Park and Kissena Corridor Park.

Residents and organizations can register to take master composter classes to learn how to teach others to compost. Find information on the classes offered by the project at various times and locations throughout the borough by visiting the Department of Sanitation's Bureau of Waste Prevention, Reuse and Recycling website at http://www.nyc.gov/html/nycwasteless/html/compost/composting_nyc.shtml

In addition, residents can also purchase compost bins at a discount through the project as well. "We offer help in setting-up compost sites and systems that work best, including all different types of containers for both indoor and outdoor composting," Baldwin adds. "We give a lot of advice and we also work with lots of homeowners throughout Queens."

Waste Equals Opportunity

Waste is no longer something to get rid of, it's a resource.

As North America's leading recycler, Waste Management processes over 8 million tons of paper, glass, plastic and metal each year – enough to fill the Empire State Building more than 12 times. By 2020, our goal is to nearly triple the amount of materials we recover through the use of innovative technologies that capture more of the value in waste.

Volunteers are an enormous part of the effort to maintain and upkeep the Idlewild Park Preserve.

Discover forever wild Queens

BY TAMMY SCILEPPI

Protecting, preserving and cultivating our green spaces, parks and wetlands as precious community resources is high on the agenda at the Eastern Queens Alliance, a proactive coalition of civic organizations that joined forces in 1989 to address their communities' issues and concerns.

Home to many rare species, like the snowy egret, ospreys, diamond-back terrapins, and fiddler crabs, Idlewild Park Preserve — the jewel of southeast Queens — is a 324-acre wetland preserve located just north of Kennedy Airport.

Some of the few remaining wetlands within the New York/New Jersey Harbor Estuary are located in the park, officially designated as a Forever Wild Preserve, one of the protected natural areas within the city that support diverse wildlife and plant populations, by the New York City Dept. of Parks and Recreation.

"Providing the largest volume of fresh water to Jamaica Bay, Idlewild's function as a natural sponge is critical to the prevention/amelioration of flooding in southeast Queens," said Barbara E. Brown, chairwoman of Eastern Queens Alliance.

"EQA organized its Idlewild Park Preservation Committee to work on and advocate for the preservation and restoration of the park, to return it to the ecological wonderland that it was and can be," Brown said.

"It is through EQA and its IPPC's advocacy for Idlewild that shrubs and trees have been planted, that several trails have been blazed, that environmental education is offered to our schools and families at large, and that a canoe/kayak launch has been constructed at Huxley and Craft Avenues - giving community access to the Idlewild Salt Marsh," she said.

"There is a master plan for the restoration of the park, replete with boardwalks, open classrooms, and stopping-off points for just soaking up nature," Brown added.

Events such as concerts, fitness activities, reptile shows, and canoeing/kayaking outings have been offered in cooperation with the Urban Park Rangers, and Science-in-the-Park Programs.

And through the efforts of the Alliance and the IPPC, a $5 million allocation by Queens Borough President Helen Marshall is bringing a full environmental science learning center to Idlewild.

"The center is being planned now, in collaboration with NYC Parks and EQA. It should be ready to open within two years," Brown said. In the meantime, the EQA is running a mini-version of that center, out of an office trailer on the northwestern edge of Idlewild, near 149th Avenue and Springfield Lane.

Much of EQA's accomplishments in Idlewild are due to the volunteer efforts of the community.

According to Brown, the larger challenge is and has been to raise sufficient funds to accomplish all that is outlined in the IPPC's Strategic Plan and to actualize EQA's master plan. A recent challenge is also to cut through some of the red tape involved in getting a permit to complete a small area of habitat restoration along with a trail, overlook and entranceway to the Park.

"Community participation in our efforts is critical. We invite those who are interested in the preservation and restoration of Idlewild to work with us on our Preservation Committee."

Grassroot efforts lead tree-planting in boro

BY ALEX PALMER

With trees dotting the streets nearly wherever you turn in Queens, it can get easy to take their pleasing sight for granted.

But while Queens' neighborhood trees may seem robust, able to take on New York's tough weather and even tougher residents using them as leaning posts or restrooms for their puppies, the trees rely on the care of members of the community to thrive.

"It's a harsh urban environment that they have to grow in, and some type of stewardship and care is needed," said Nelson Villarubia, deputy director of Trees New York, a nonprofit group dedicated to planting and preserving trees throughout the city. "It's basically like a houseplant — planted in a small section of the ground with really limited growth space."

One way for a person to care for their neighborhood tree: Don't put garbage bags near the tree bed on trash night. According to Villarubia, chemicals and liquids that are harmful to trees can leak out and into the roots if the bags are in too close proximity.

Individuals can also use a small garden cultivator on the soil every few weeks, loosening the soil, which allows rain to seep in better and it's better for the roots. A small layer of mulch can also be added to protect from dog urine and the rock salt sprayed on the streets during winter.

Those who want to go a step further can consider enrolling in one of Trees New York's workshops. They offer a number of programs, including the 12-hour Citizen Pruner course. The next Queens course starts May 10. Registered at www.treesny.org.

The group also teaches tree identification. Villarubia said there are 16 common trees in the city, and in Queens individuals are most likely to come across ginkgo trees (with fan-shaped leaves) and London planes (with camouflage-like exfoliating bark).

It's basically like a houseplant — planted in a small section of the ground with really limited growth space.

Nelson Villarubia

Deputy director of Trees New York

Those undertaking a more ambitious tree care project might consider visiting Ioby (<http://ioby.org>), a New York City-based nonprofit that takes a crowdsourcing approach to neighborhood environmental projects. Individuals can post details about a project on the site, from building a community garden to installing tree guards on their block, and send the link out to friends and community members calling for funds and volunteers.

"We call it crowd-resourcing versus crowd-funding — it's much more than just a funding platform," said Erin Barnes, co-founder and executive director of Ioby, which stands for In Our Backyard.

Typically, those involved with the project live within two miles of where it takes place, according to Barnes, and donations average about $35 a person. This has added up to nearly $200,000 in funds since Ioby was founded in 2008.

Those looking to start a project in Western Queens can take advantage of the Greening Western Queens Fund, a matching grant available to those whose projects qualify, though the deadline to apply is March 15.

All of these efforts are aided in no small part by Mayor Michael Bloomberg and the City of New York's MillionTreesNYC initiative, aimed at expanding the urban forest throughout all five boroughs. The initiative has resulted in 558,490 trees planted on public, private, and commercial land so far at the time of this writing.

"The mayor's Million-Trees plan not only about the aesthetic improvement of the city, but also has the educational aspect to it," said George Hendrey, distinguished professor of earth and environmental science at Queens College. "It brings back to people's minds the need to be aware of green environment and thinking about sustaining it when we live in a very manufactured environment."

Solar energy growth is imperative: Gennaro

BY TREVINA NICHOLSON

By cutting the cost of their electric bills, Queens homeowners can save money and the environment by using solar energy.

In 2011, according to the New York State Energy Research and Development Authority, headed by Gov. Andrew Cuomo, Queens was listed as the top borough in the city for having the highest percentage of application interest in solar energy. In fact, Queens accounted for a third of the applications within the state.

"I don't see solar energy as a trend," said Councilman James F. Gennaro (D-Briarwood), chairman of the City Council's Environmental Protection Committee. "I see it as an imperative for the future."

Since 2003, when NYSERDA's solar energy incentive program first began, the authority has seen a higher demand from residents, who are showing more curiosity to what the solar panels can do for their homes.

Gennaro is one of many council members who is in full support of the green initiative in Queens. He believes there will be a day when people will have no other choice but to rely on solar energy.

He explained that if we continue to burn off our fossil fuels, the results will not be something worth looking forward to such as dramatic climate change. He also indicated that solar, wind, and other alternative energy sources are being revamped to be of better use to society.

"This is not what we wish for our children and grandchildren. It's very imperative that we do something about it. That we open the door for solar energy," said Gennaro.

Although turning your home into a solar energy environment can be costly, NYSERDA offers incentives to homeowners that will alleviate some of the worry. One of the incentives that focuses on residences allows the authority to give up to $2 million each month to applicants.

Dayle Zatlin, assistant director of communications for NYSERDA, explained that if the authority has not given out the $2 million fund worth in photovoltaic — a method of creating solar energy — solar panel incentives, it will be allocated to the next set of incentives for another energy project.

"Our goal is to build a sustainable industry in the state," said Zatlin. "We want to help people pay, knowing that it is a little expensive."

Zatlin made clear that an average size home in Queens normally uses a four-kilowatt system, which produces 4,600 kilowatts per year. According to Zatlin, the amount of kilowatts produced by solar panels provides about 70-80 percent of electricity the home needs.

A solar unit for an average single-family home would cost about $24,000, but by using the $6,000 in incentives available through NYSERDA, the price could drop to $18,000.

In addition, the government allows a 25 percent state solar tax credit and a 30 percent federal solar tax credit for homeowners. With those credits, homeowners could only pay $9,400 for a solar system, according to NYSERDA.

As a part of the Going Green in Queens conference on March 24, residents will have an opportunity to learn more about how they can make Queens greener each day. It all starts with education, according to Fred Kress, president of the Queens Coalition for Parks and Green Spaces.

"People say they can't do anything [to help the environment]," Kress said, adding he hopes to change that with the annual conference he organizes.

A Life Unassisted

Author muses on home design and growing old

BY ALAN KRAWITZ

Longtime Bayside resident Dr. Jeffrey Rosenfeld teams with NYC architect to show seniors how to leave the nursing home behind.

For those who dread the idea of someday retiring to an assisted living facility — or worse yet a nursing home, — a new book explores alternative ways to age gracefully in the comfort of a redesigned and re-imagined home while staying connected to friends, family and favorite activities.

Written by longtime Bayside resident Dr. Jeffrey Rosenfeld and architect Wid Chapman, the coffee-table-style book “Unassisted Living: Ageless Homes for Later Life” (Monacelli Press, division of Random House), is rich with illustrations, featuring seven chapters and 33 distinct homes and apartments from Los Angeles condos that resemble high-end hotels to smartly designed Midwest hideaways that enable seniors to live “off the grid.”

“Today’s boomers won’t be following the lead of previous generations,” says Rosenfeld, who teaches environmental gerontology at Nassau Community College and is the former Director of Gerontology at Hofstra University.

Environmental gerontology examines ways in which architecture and design are affected by the country’s aging population.

‘Uncanny’ space brings menagerie of arts themes

BY ALEX PALMER

Vaudeville shows, craft nights and electronic music concerts. Not a bad lineup for what was a vacant wood-flooring showroom just a couple months ago.

Uncanny Valley, a new art and performance space, officially opened to the public on Feb. 24, bringing all of these offerings to visitors of its 26-09 Jackson Ave., Long Island City location. It is one of the latest projects from non-profit group Chashama, which repurposes unused or dormant spaces to create temporary art galleries, studios and theaters.

Uncanny Valley is a combination of all of these. Its opening party featured Balkan no-wave band the Drunkard's Wife, a play from Williamsburg's Dome Theater and an installation from artist-in-residence Lisa Ludwig. It holds monthly musical and theatrical evenings, with the next one on March 16 and a reading event the following week, as well as craft and community nights.

The space will also host a series of events after the PS1 Warm Up days on Saturdays throughout the summer.

In addition to being an event venue, Uncanny Valley serves as a workshop space for the National Theater of the United States of America theater company, as it works on a production of “The Golden Veil” that it describes as an “epic micro-spectacle” on its website.

“People can come see the workshop in action. The production value might not be high, but it will be an open and inviting atmosphere and we want people’s feedback,” said Normandy Raven Sherwood, co-director of Uncanny Valley. “The space is not just for the final presentation of work, but all the stages along the way.”

This work-in-progress approach infuses the whole space, and the broader efforts of Chashama, which secured temporary use of the building, as well as two other spaces nearby, including an old Bank of America location, from Manhattan-based Rockrose Development Corp.

“I think it’s a terrific idea,” said Patricia Dunphy, senior vice president of Rockrose Development Corp. “Of course we have certain restrictions in the agreement: It has to be family-friendly, and be sensitive to the community, and it is.”

It was this partnership that helped create the 15,000-square-foot The Palms party in Long Island City last summer, complete with live music, indoor lounge and three pools created from repurposed dumpsters.

Dunphy reached out to Chashama after seeing the group’s 16-foot window display of rotating art exhibitions on 53rd Street in Manhattan, previously the site of the Donnell Library Center until it closed in August 2008. The group currently has more than a dozen spaces throughout the city in addition to Uncanny Valley, including subsidized artist studios, exhibit and rehearsal spaces.

“We’re always looking for new space and proposals for artists,” said Kim Schnaubert, director of development and communications for chashama. “We’ve presented all sorts of independent artists’ work, and really program them according to the needs of the space.”

"They're (boomers) creating homes where they can 'age in place,'" says Rosenfeld, who has written and researched extensively on boomers throughout the world. "... They want to build homes so that they don't have to leave their familiar surroundings."

The term "boomers" generally refers to the nearly 72 million people born in the United States between the years 1946 and 1965. Rosenfeld says that part of his inspiration to write the book stems from his own status as a boomer, now turning 65 and beginning to wrestle with questions of his own home and community.

Rosenfeld contends that boomers are truly transformative and that they are changing the way we will think about home and aging in later life.

"It's a matter of people reacting to their environment and home and their home and environment giving them options or not," Rosenfeld says.

Some of those options include architecture designs that take into account, for example, a chronic or degenerative illness. Examples from the book include a house specially designed with ample floor space, no stairs or thresholds and V-shaped columns that provide structural integrity while making navigation in the home easier.

Rosenfeld asks, "Does your home shape your future?" He adds that boomers are already creating new styles and pathways to later life.

The pathways the book explores include "bistro living," the concept whereby boomers downsize from larger homes into condos, apartments and even studios so they can stay close to things they love in life, such as favorite restaurants, stores, hobbies, etc. just by moving to more easily manageable living spaces.

Yet another way to stay connected, says Rosenfeld, is for boomers to incorporate home offices so they can continue to work at home and keep productive.

He points out that previous generations moved to places like Florida that ostensibly served to isolate them from friends and family. "That might have been a good decision for those people then, but I don't think boomers will be repeating what Bayside author Dr. Jeffrey Rosenfeld's book, "Unassisted Living: Ageless Homes for Later Life," captures the changing art of architecture as generations grow older.

many of them saw as mistakes."

And as technology has served to link the world via social media and other platforms it will also enable people to age where they want and still be connected to vital services such as health care.

"Telemedicine enables people to live where they want and still have their medical needs addressed," Rosenfeld says.

He also says boomers may be the first generation to actually live independently as they age since more will be able to live "off the grid" because technology will keep them connected to healthcare.

Asked about the role of traditional senior housing solutions, Rosenfeld says that now even nursing homes have begun to get the message that their facilities carry a stigma.

"Nursing homes now realize that everyone dreads them," he said. "They're re-branding themselves and now promoting themselves as sports medicine and rehabilitation facilities, as many boomers will need things like knee and sports-related surgeries."

Calling the book "upbeat and forward-thinking," Rosenfeld says he is thrilled with the response it's getting. "The book is generating very supportive feedback."

For those who wish to offer their own feedback on the book in person, there will be a book signing event at Barnes & Noble Booksellers in Manhasset on March 22 from 7-9 p.m.

For more information on the book visit www.livingunassisted.com.

TO THE PARENTS OF NEW YORK CITY:

THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT

Despite attacks by Mayor Bloomberg and his allies, tens of thousands of New York City public school teachers go to work every day to make their students' lives better.

Thank you for your continuing support for the work our teachers do.

If Mayor Bloomberg lets corporations run city child care, 10,000 kids will get fired.

If Mayor Bloomberg gets his way and turns over child care to for-profit companies, ten thousand city children will be left at home. Community based child care centers will be shuttered, and working parents left to fend for themselves. While companies make millions, thousands of families will have no access to safe, affordable, and quality care. When companies prosper and kids suffer, something's wrong.

When corporations run our city, profits come before people.

ing to Merritt.

But police were making connections as well in the aftermath of the shooting after officers first arrested two teenagers at the scene. Cops eventually netted 11 people following Adams' murder, according to the NYPD, and one of those young men was recently charged with a separate murder that occurred last month, police said.

But news of the arrests were absent from the packed chapel, where many of Adams' friends and family got one last look at his face before the casket was closed.

Erica Ford, an advocate trying to end violence in southeast Queens, said Adams' death cannot be forgotten.

"I want every person who is committed to peace in southeast Queens to stand up," she said as the entire chapel got to their feet.

Ford has made this speech before. She listed several other murder victims who died from gunshots over the years.

But she hoped that this time it would be different.

"This is not an accident that Darryl brought out all of southeast Queens," she said. "This has to be the one."

Ford wants to raise $5 million to institute a program called Cease Fire, which would combat gun violence, in all of the public housing projects in the area. She also wants to make a musical tribute to Adams by bringing musicians from different neighborhoods together.

But Ford was also with the family Tuesday, when she said family and friends clashed with police.

An officer at the 103rd Precinct confirmed that an incident took place and that several people were arrested, and Jamaica Hospital Center confirmed that Merritt had been admitted and was in stable condition.

City Councilman Ruben Wills (D-Jamaica) was working to get some of the young men who were arrested released, a community leader said.

Adams' funeral occurred nearly a week after police raided a Rosedale home and made 11 arrests soon after his murder, authorities said.

One of the teens arrested, Terrance Housner, 20, was also charged with the murder of Cody Khan, who was killed last month.

Immediately after Adams was shot, police arrested 16-year-old Alexander Burgess and 19-year-old Sean Barnhill. They were charged with murder and criminal possession of a weapon, but later they were also charged with attempted murder in connection with other shootings in the area, police said.

And among the 11 arrested in the Rosedale house, 17-year-old Dontaye Goines and 17-year-old Romain Brady were also charged with attempted murder, police said.

Goines and Burgess allegedly shot a man Feb. 25, according to the NYPD, while Brady and Barnhill are accused of a shooting March 1.

the area and results from the 2010 census. Though the coalition took issue with the fact that Flushing in its entirety was not included.

Under state law, a bill must sit for three days before it can be voted on. Since the bill for both the Assembly and Senate — which ran about 250 pages and outlined each of the districts street-by-street — was finalized Sunday just before midnight, the lawmakers were expected to vote this week.

Along with the bill containing the new district lines, the Legislature is likely to vote on a separate bill containing a constitutional amendment that would reform the process 10 years down the road. Cuomo would also like to see a law passed to ensure that the reform sticks, he said in a recent radio interview.

But Gianaris said he would prefer that Cuomo veto the lines, which would then be drawn up by a special court magistrate.

The argument that it is too late to have a court draw up the lines — since the state primaries are scheduled for September and the congressional primaries for June — does not apply, since a federal judge recently drew congressional lines in a timely manner that were positively received by New Yorkers, although not by incumbent lawmakers, Gianaris said.

"The courts handled the congressional lines, and they were transparent and fair," he said. "The lines that the courts produced have been critically acclaimed, and I think it is certainly better than what the Legislature is able to come up with."

"Implementing the plan will improve water quality throughout New York Harbor and our neighborhoods," Strickland said.

The request for proposals identify three separate contract areas.

The first contract seeks companies to install these green projects on public property in a large section of central Queens, comprising mainly Forest Hills and Rego Park. Another contract seeks companies to install the same devices in another area covering Corona and Elmhurst.

If a contractor installs green roofs on one of the many schools or city-owned buildings in the area, for example, the water trapped in the soil will not flow into the city's sewer pipes and overwhelm the system. In this case, the excess combined rainwater and sewage, called combined sewer overflow, would belch out into Flushing Bay through two pipes at the water's edge.

So much rancid sediment from the sewer outfalls has accumulated in the bay under the pipes that during low tide the exposed soil emits a nauseating odor.

In response, the city had planned to dredge the area and remove some of the soil, but the DEP's request for proposals seeks to eliminate the problem at the source.

Western Queens is home to a toxic waterway of its own: the superfund site known as Newtown Creek, which has problems similar to Flushing Bay with sewer outfall pipes.

In neighborhoods including Ridgewood and Glendale, the city is seeking a third contract to install green infrastructure there.

Again, public and city-owned property is fair game, including schools and sidewalks.

Some other suggestions for any companies seeking to apply include enhanced tree pits, according to the DEP website.

The extended tree pits provide not only a larger area of soil for water to soak into, but also an underground cistern of sorts that can act as a reservoir for trees and flowers above, and more importantly hold rainwater that might otherwise flow into the sewer system.

Porous sidewalks act in a similar manner, allowing light and water to filter through the top surface to some sort of foliage planted underneath it while still permitting walking.

Discharge of sewage and the pollution of Flushing Bay and Newtown Creek have been a concern of Queens residents.

In College Point, residents there are advocating for the DEP to restore wetlands around the bay in exchange for construction that will upgrade sewer pipes in the neighborhood.

In western Queens, the city and oil companies are currently conducting a study on the best way to clean up the fetid Newtown Creek.

Holy Cross hockey captures third title

BY MIKE MCAVOY

Cody Frucht is going to have a hard time taking off his Holy Cross hockey jersey and hanging up his skates for the last time. Winning three championships in four years of high school will have that effect.

"I wish I was staying another year," he said with a smile. "Kids come into high school looking to win a championship. I got three and I couldn't ask for anything better. I'll never forget it."

Holy Cross' nine seniors would agree with their teammate, and their coach, Kevin Goodspeed, cannot say enough about this senior class.

Holy Cross defeated St. Francis Prep 6-0 in Game 2 of the CHSHL Class B best-of-three championship series at the Ice Hutch in Mount Vernon, sealing yet another championship for Holy Cross' veteran-laden squad.

"It's the best senior class we've ever seen at this school," Goodspeed said. "They're irreplaceable, we have five captains out there, and there is a reason for it. It's not even about the championships they've won. It's the level of talent they have and the commitment to the program."

Holy Cross (18-1-1) came into Game 2 of the championship series with one thing in mind: Close out St. Francis Prep and don't give the Terriers any life for a winner-take-all Game 3. One of the senior captains, Sean Dolan, quickly acted on this mindset.

With 9:16 left in the first period, Dolan sniped in a shot over the left shoulder of St. Francis Prep goaltender John Doyle. That one goal would set the tone for the rest of the match.

Less than a minute later, Frucht would score his first of two goals in the period. The second tally came at the 3:45 mark, after he received a pass from

Bayside wins for ill coach

Commodores progress in postseason as coach battles cancer

BY MARC RAIMONDI

Steve Piorkowski has suffered from arthritis in his shoulders for years, the product of playing sports and coaching his entire life. One day in late January, though, the pain got bad — intolerably bad.

"The difference is the level of soreness that I had went from one to an 11," the longtime Bayside girls' basketball and softball coach said.

The sensation was so intense that Piorkowski couldn't even hold his head up. After a trip to the hospital and visits to his orthopedist, results turned up something far more serious than arthritis: a plasmacytoma in his neck.

A vicious malignant tumor was eating away at the bone marrow in Piorkowski's C6 vertebra. When he woke up that day in January, he had a broken neck.

"When they told me what it was, I never heard of it in my life," he said. "It sounded so foreign. I just really wanted to know, where do we go from here?"

Obviously, Piorkowski, 51, wouldn't be able to coach the Commodores girls' basketball team for the remainder of the season. But other than that, he got good news. There would be pain, but the plasmacytoma hadn't turned into multiple myeloma — it hadn't spread anywhere besides his neck.

With Piorkowski fighting cancer, his Bayside team has embarked on its own incredible journey. The Commodores, seeded 38th out of 40 teams in PSAL Class A, have advanced all the way to the semifinals.

"We're doing all this for him," senior forward Syndy Durugordon said.

The players saw Piorkowski for the first time last Sunday. He came by the school as the Commodores were practicing. It was emotional for both parties. Mitchell said she was in tears. Piorkowski, who is extremely physically fit, was wheelchair-bound and prone, because of his broken neck.

"It was really tough seeing him like that," said Steve Scharf, the JV boys' coach who has taken the reins of the girls' team.

He told the players that they were doing what he always knew they could do, that they were fulfilling their potential. Piorkowski also said how tough it has been to be away from the team during this Cinderella run. During a huge upset victory over defending champion Wings this week in the quarterfinals, senior Sara DeLuca put his name on a piece of paper in her sneaker, dedicating the game to him.

"That feels really good," Piorkowski said. "That's really nice. That's just heartwarming that you can have an effect on a kid like that. It's really sweet. I don't know what to say. It makes me feel a lot better."

Like Bayside, Piorkowski still has work to do. He got good news last Thursday. His blood and protein levels are back to normal. The radiation treatments he's been undergoing have worked. Piorkowski might not need chemotherapy. Doctors even think he could be able to forego surgery, that the bone will regenerate once the tumor is destroyed.

"I'm in really good shape, to be honest with you," Piorkowski said. "It's the neck that's the tough part. If this was in my hand or my elbow, I'd be working."

He has left his teams in able hands. Scharf and JV softball Coach Maggie Kasimis, who will take over the varsity on an interim basis, are both former students of his. Piorkowski, who his players lovingly refer to as "P," hopes to be

St. Albans' Pathways heads to Class B finals

BY ZACH BRAZILLER

When top-seeded Pathways Prep of St. Albans was turning its PSAL Class B semifinal contest into a rout, ripping off a 19-6 run to create a canyon-sized 19-point lead, Jordan Washington was a key contributor.

But there were others. That's what made Sunday's 68-59 win over No. 5 Health Professions of Manhattan in the basketball semis at CCNY so impressive.

Sure, the highly recruited 6-foot-7 Washington was his usual dominant self, with 20 points, 10 rebounds and four blocks. There were also guards Sam Annorh Jr. (13 points, nine assists) and Izaha Jackson (13 points, six assists) as well as forward Romario Fletcher (14 points) making an impact on the contest as well.

After Washington fouled out, Health Professions (17-3) got within eight behind the splendid play of senior Gelvis Solano — he poured in a game-high 32 points — but his teammates remain composed. Annorh completed a traditional three-point play and Jackson sank two free throws to ice the win.

Pathways (22-4) was Washington's team last year as it won its first city title of any kind. When he was lost for a month due to academics — he was eligible by PSAL standards but Pathways principal Kimberly Mitchell instituted a new rule for student-athletes barring them from failing a single class — the Trailblazers hardly lost a beat. That's because Annorh, Jackson and Fletcher emerged, combining to fill the massive void left by Washington.

"Not many people thought we could play without Jordan and we proved it," Annorh said. "When he came back, it boosted us up. When we were without him, Pathways' Jordan Washington had 20 points, 10 rebounds and four blocked shots as the Trailblazers topped Manhattan's Health Professions 68-59 in the PSAL Class B semifinals.

we had to rely on shooting and transition. Now we can beat teams in many different ways."

Health Professions Coach James Castillo was in fact most impressed by Pathways' guards. The Trailblazers' newfound balance figures to help them Sunday against Newcomers and in the state Federation in Albany if they get that far.

"It helps because everybody can't focus on me anymore," said Washington, who has a host of Division I schools after him, such as Louisville, Villanova, Miami, Arizona and Marquette. "It's a lot different. Everybody on the team is scoring."

Not to be forgotten, the 6-foot-2 Solano put on a show. He dropped in four three-pointers from well-beyond the arc, he finished above the rim, made plays for teammates and even pulled down 15 rebounds.

"That's the best player we've seen all year," Peaks raved. "That's an 'AA' player. He can play for anybody in New York City."

When told he may have waited too long to take over, Solano deflected criticism from his teammates.

"It was a team thing," he said. "We should have all picked up for each other. It's a tough feeling, but I'm proud of my team. Nobody expected us to go this far."

No. 3 Newcomers 59, No. 7 WHEELS 50: Cristian Zapata had 29 points and 12 rebounds and Larry Baez added 17 points for undefeated Newcomers, the Queens B West champion which will meet No. 1 Pathways in the 'B' final Sunday at 1 p.m. at CCNY in Harlem.

Tyshawn Myles had 16 points and 14 rebounds and Eulogio Medina had 15 points, five rebounds and four assists for WHEELS (22-3), which completes its first varsity season.

Divorce Caribbean Style

For a growing number of New Yorkers, tired of the delays and expense of conventional local divorces, fast, inexpensive Caribbean and offshore US divorces have been the answer.

A leader in the fast divorce business has been Divorcefast.com of Massachusetts, a company that has been providing speedy, low-cost foreign divorces for 50 years. The company provides divorces that can be completed in as little as one day in Mexico, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, and the US offshore island of Guam.

According to Alan Alford, proprietor of Divorce.com, some of the divorces offered require travel to the court, while some can be done without any travel or court appearance. Some require both parties to sign the court petition for divorce, while others can be achieved with only one party signing. All of the divorces happen very quickly and with a minimum amount of paperwork.

The divorces are valid and recognized everywhere, and Alford reports that he processes several thousand of them every year, particularly for New Yorkers. The total cost for fast divorces starts at $895, with other options raising the price to as high as $1,500. All of the divorces, Alford says, are completed within a few days and the clients are then free to remarry or otherwise continue with their lives as single persons. Anyone interested in more details about the Divorcefast offerings should access the company website: www.divorcefast.com The forms and instructions are printed out from there and submitted to the company. For those lacking Internet access Alford and his staff are prepared to discuss foreign divorces on the phone, or by mail.

Lady Royals miss chance against Naz

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI

The run and the spark came too late for a Christ the King team that has been resilient all season.

"They never folded," Coach Bob Mackey said. "They didn't quit tonight."

The Royals cut an 18-point third quarter deficit to 10 late in the fourth and got as close as five with just seconds remaining in an eventual 52-47 loss to rival and nationally ranked Nazareth in the CHSAA Class AA girls' basketball semifinals Friday at Archbishop Molloy.

"It did come too late," UPenn-bound guard Rayne Connell said. "The worst part about it is we had it. We had it in our hands."

Turnovers (29) and missed layups (eight) doomed CK. Mackey said Nazareth kept sending fresh and long bodies at sophomore star Sierra Calhoun and limited her to just 10 points. Kollyns Scarbrough and Connell each chipped in 11. Christ the King (15-14) had a chance to get back into the game earlier, down just 29-20, after a Taylor Butigian layup with 6:28 remaining in the third quarter and Nazareth point guard Darius Faulk on the bench. Instead the Lady Kingmen (17-5) scored the next six points and jumped ahead 35-20.

"Three less turnovers and it's a ball game," Mackey said. "It was a ball game."

What Connell was most proud of was that she and her team didn't let the game turn into a 30-point blowout. Mackey found a spark in reserve guard Erica Eddy late in the third quarter and Amanni Fernandez also provided energy off the bench.

Fighting back has been a theme this season after CK began the year 0-6 against five nationally ranked teams, lost five league games — including a third-place tie breaker to Molloy — and finished the regular season 12-12.

The Royals, who own a win over nationally ranked Cicero-North Syracuse, beat Nazareth just a week ago in the Brooklyn/Queens semifinals en route to their 26th CHSAA Brooklyn/Queens title in the last 28 years. That win, which earned them a first-round bye in this tournament, came with the Lady Kingmen missing McDonald's All-American Brianna Butler, out with a knee injury. She had 16 points, 11 boards and seven rebounds on this night.

"She's a tough match-up for her size," Mackey said of Butler. "She settles them down."

Christ the King losses Connell, Adelphi-bound guard Lauren Nuss and reserve guard Ashley Raaffor next season. Mackey talked all postseason how his talented sophomores grew up. More will be expected starting next November.

"With the loss of the seniors, I still think they can take this," Connell said. "They have a lot of talent. They just have to work hard."

Poll-favorite leads Lewis

Jasmine Davis keeps Patriots in the PSAL championship hunt

BY MARC RAIMONDI

The ball is in Jasmine Davis' hands in crunch time for Francis Lewis, but that doesn't necessarily mean the senior guard is scoring the go-ahead or tying basket.

"If it came down to the last shot, I feel very confident in Jasmine taking it," Patriots Coach Steve Tsai said. "But a lot of times, teams will key in on her."

Davis was voted the city's top clutch girls' basketball performer in an nypost.com poll last week. She received 8,009 votes, good enough for 48.73 percent of the 16,437 cast. Horace Mann's Madison Gordon was second with 5,863 votes (35.67 percent) and Nazareth's Darius Faulk was a distant third with 796 votes (4.84 percent).

"I feel when the game is on the line or my team and I are struggling, I have to be a leader," Davis said, "whether it be making a big shot or creating a key play."

Davis is the defacto point guard for Francis Lewis. She is the team's primary facilitator. But she also guards all different positions on defense and, at a strong 5-foot-8, is one of the Patriots' top rebounders.

"Jasmine is so important," Tsai said. "She sacrifices a lot in terms of her shooting. She has to do so much. She's responsible for being a playmaker. She has to rebound against bigger girls."

She's a pretty big reason why No. 6 Lewis upset No. 3 Truman in the PSAL Class AA quarterfinals last weekend. She had 11 points, 13 rebounds and seven assists in that game.

"We're very excited and happy to have made it this far again," Davis said. "We have a lot of respect for [Bergtaum] Coach [Ed] Grezinsky and know the Bergtraum girls are as hungry as we are. We plan to go into the [semi-finals] game as if it were our last because it very well could be. We've been through a lot this season and we're ready to go far."

Francis Lewis has not been to the championship game at Madison Square Garden since 2005-06. It would also be Tsai's first trip if Lewis pulled off a second straight upset. The Patriots did beat Bergtraum in both teams' league finale.

When the season ends, Davis figures to have plenty of college options. Tsai said she could go to any Division II program in the country. And she's also received interest from Stony Brook, Albany, Pepperdine and East Carolina. Her sister, Janine, was a star point guard at St. Michael Academy under Coach Apache Paschall, where she won a New York State Federation title, and now plays at Siena.

"Growing up being in elementary and junior high school, many girls at my age at the time weren't exposed to that type of basketball," Davis said. "I learned at an early age that basketball is more than a game."

Her mother, Celia, played basketball at Clara Barton and coaches her and many Francis Lewis players on the Exodus Lady Lions travel team.

The sport has been part of her life for so long, Davis doesn't let things get to her in those late-game moments.

"I usually save all the nervousness for before the game," she said, "but once I hit the court it's a whole different story."

Brandon Muller and ripped a shot past Doyle.

The first period came to a close and Holy Cross jumped out on St. Francis Prep 3-0.

"We wanted to avoid a Game 3 at all costs," Goodspeed said. "When you're playing a team you're so familiar with, anything can happen in a Game 3."

Holy Cross erased any hopes the Terriers (12-5-3) had for that Game 3 in the first period, but they didn't skate lightly after that.

In the second period, although it went scoreless, Holy Cross shows its toughness. The period saw a number of scrums, the biggest between the Knights'

Ryan Mattino and the Terriers' Ryan Borello, as the two were tied up and exchanged shoves as they fell to the ice.

To get an idea of the tenacity the Knights played with, all one would have to do was look to the penalty box. After that tussle, three members of their team sat in the box at the same time. The Knights came out looking to fight off any hope of recovery the Terriers had, and that's exactly what they did.

"We didn't even give them a chance to come back," Frucht said. "We talked about it before the game. Don't even give them any life, put them down right away."

The Knights would add three more goals in the final period, scored by Steven Cachillo, Brandon Muller and the final goal by Rob Anderson.

With its six-goal victory in the second game, Holy Cross outscored the Terriers 12-1 in the series. The Knights had solid goaltending throughout and the team skated out two goalies in their championship victory, to complete the shut-out.

J.D. Schabhuttl played the first two periods, stopping 13 shots, and senior David Pastiglione made 10 saves in the final period to seal the championship.

The best senior class Holy Cross has ever seen went out the only way it knew how to: winning.

How exactly do you put winning three championships in four years into words?

"Speechless," Dolan said.

Bayside

back in June for a potential Bayside softball playoff run.

It would be hard to top what the girls' basketball team is doing. Senior forward Ashley Mitchell said she and her teammates were even more inspired to beat Wings in the quarterfinals after seeing Piorkowski three days earlier.

"He said, 'I'm so proud of you guys, I could cry,'" Mitchell said. "And to hear that from 'P'? He never shows any emotion ever. It was amazing."

Added Piorkowski, "I think I'm a little astonished by it, to be honest. They've played dominant basketball against some very good teams."

Bayside, which finished fifth in PSAL Queens A East, defeated No. 6 Beacon in the first round, which sent its confidence soaring. The Commodores took down No. 11 Lafayette in the second round and then powerful Wings — coming back from 27-15 down at halftime — in the quarters. Next up is Curtis, which is arguably favored to win the whole thing.

Piorkowski, who plans to be in attendance, isn't worried.

"They don't think they're going to lose," he said. "They're not going there to lose."

He doesn't plan on it either.

DeBlasio Warns Consumers About Classified Ads

Toll numbers may be a direct line to trouble. Classified ads are intended to help people by facilitating communication and advertising available services; however, some of the hotlines & service numbers in classifieds actually hurt the people who rely on them by cheating them of their hard-earned dollars. "Most newspapers print a disclaimer in their classified ad section to warn readers about numbers that are a direct line to trouble. Any number starting with 900, 540, 595 or 871 charges a fee beyond a local call. In some instances, ads initially advertise calls to a local number, but then direct callers to a second number starting with one of the paid exchanges. "Consumers must also question the legitimacy of vague classifieds because they too could be a scam. Before responding to an ad, consumers should verify the source of all information & always be wary about sending money or signing a contract with an unknown party."

How to survive in an uncertain job market

Frustrations in your job, industry, or life may make you feel like jumping ship some days, swimming toward whatever job seems the most promising at the moment. Not so fast. If you want to improve your situation long term, you need to step back, take a breath, and approach a career change thoughtfully and deliberately.

"Switching careers takes some effort," said Dr. Mary Hawkins, president of Bellevue University. "You need to figure out what experience and skills you need and the level of education required to enter and excel in a new field."

Determine where the jobs are

Hawkins suggests starting with a website that provides data about expanding and contracting industries. The Monster Employment Index is another good resource that provides a monthly gauge of U.S. job demand.

Earn a relevant degree

According to Education Dynamics, 60 percent of U.S. jobs will require much more than a college degree by 2018.

"If you want to qualify for the jobs of tomorrow, completing a bachelor's degree is a wise move," Hawkins said.

Instead of enrolling in a degree program because you find it interesting, Hawkins recommends choosing a field of study that will translate into a job in a growth industry. She shared the following tips:

- Check job sites to see how many jobs are available in specific industries.
- Use listed educational and skills requirements for these positions as guidelines for researching degree programs.
- Figure out what you will actually be learning in individual courses and how you can apply this.
- Call schools directly and ask directors of the programs you've identified if you'll be engaged in hands-on experience while you learn.

"If you are one of the 38 million Americans with some college credit, finding a school with generous transfer policies may significantly decrease the time required to complete your degree," she continued.

Specialize to stand out

As bachelor's degrees become more the norm, job seekers will need more specialized expertise to stand out. For example, adding a concentration in logistics management or marketing will take you much further than a general business degree sans concentration.

"Employers are looking for people who have relevant skills that are specifically tailored for the job," said Hawkins. "Job seekers must find the degree and learning environment that enables them to develop the specialized skills they will need to get that job."

The workplace is changing and by starting now, you'll have achieved the education you'll need to succeed in the next decade.
