

Street named for long gone boxing arena

BY BILL PARRY

A wave of nostalgia passed over a bustling corner in Sunnyside Saturday afternoon.

Longtime residents joined community leaders and former prizefighters outside the Wendy's, at 44-11 Queens Blvd., for the renaming of 45th Street in honor of the Sunnyside Gardens Arena, a historic sporting venue that stood on the site from 1945 to 1970 and remains part of the neighborhood's fabric to this day.

Councilman Jimmy Van Bramer (D-Sunnyside) joined members of Ring 8 Veterans Boxing Association, a fraternity of retired boxers, in dedicating Sunnyside Gardens Arena Way as a vintage ring bell was struck ten times to honor the fighters who made the building famous.

"We should all remember the building and the men who fought here by unveiling this street sign to remind everyone of this special and hallowed ground," Van Bramer said.

Floyd Patterson, Emil Griffith, Jose Torres and Vito Antuofermo were all world champion boxers who fought in the storied red-brick arena. Gerry Cooney had his first professional bout there and actor Tony Danza stepped in the same ring several times before moving on to TV sitcoms like "Taxi" and "Who's the Boss" in the '70s and '80s.

"Danza is better actor than he was a fighter," 84-year-old photographer Frank Carrado said. "He wasn't too good in the ring. Heystacks Calhoun wrestled here. Now he was something else."

Boro Hall parking garage closes

City shuttered Kew Gardens facility due to safety concerns without much notice

BY SARINA TRANGLE

Elected officials pleaded with the city to park its plans of demolishing the municipal garage near Borough Hall and the Queens courthouse, but ultimately lost out.

The city Department of Transportation announced Tuesday at 5 p.m. that it would shut what its website describes as a 600-spot garage beginning Wednesday due to safety concerns.

It noted traffic enforcement agents would be assigned to the area and DOT would suspend alternate side parking nearby through Friday.

The department declined to answer specific questions about the future of the 1963-era garage at 80-25 126th St.

But City Councilwoman Karen Koslowitz's office (D-Forest Hills) said DOT planned to knock down the garage and operate a 300-spot surface parking lot in its place. Her staff said it was not given any timeline for the demolition or construction work.

"I understand that the municipal lot is no longer safe and needs to be closed," Koslowitz said in a statement. "What I don't understand is why city agencies, having come to this conclusion months ago, did not notify the community and elected officials so that we might better plan for the closing of this parking field."

Snowday Food Truck captures foody award for Rookie of the Year

BY BILL PARRY

A unique food truck was serving up maple-themed lunches on Northern Boulevard near the Clocktower Building in Long Island City last week. An eight-man work crew that dishes out maple grilled cheese sandwiches and beer-battered maple onion rings from the Snowday Food Truck are all formerly incarcerated youths.

“I got the idea when I was a teacher on Rikers Island,” said Jordyn Lexton, the truck’s operator. “I wanted to help young people just out of prison, so I went back to school and learned how to start this kind of enterprise and we went into service in April.”

Lexton went on to create a non-profit called Drive Change that builds and operates its own food trucks that hire and train young people recently released from prison. Two members of the current crew are from Queens.

A half year later the Snowday Food Truck won the Vendy Award as the Rookie of the Year, part of a showcase for the city’s best street food vendors.

“Winning that prestigious award was a huge piece of it,” Lexton said. “The pride factor is now very big on that truck, but to be the best program you have to be the best business.”

The truck sets up shop most Wednesdays at the Falchi Building, at 31-00 47th Ave. in Long Island City, the Brooklyn Navy Yards on Thursdays and Governors Island on the weekends. It is facilitated by the Fortune Society, the Long Island City organization that promotes alternatives to incarceration.

Transportation.

The congressman said $137 million was set aside for protecting the Rockaway subway line, which was shut for seven months after Hurricane Sandy washed over its tracks in October 2012. The funding will also help protect flood prone A train stops, such as the Howard Beach and Broad Channel stations.

“It’s tremendous, as I look at it, particularly with regards to the Rockaways,” Meeks said. “We had seven months without the subway system... and that crippled all of the Rockaways because you couldn’t get across the bridge.”

Another $617 million from the federal government would fund redesigns of 10 subway yards, including those in the Rockaways and Queens, to ensure their perimeter protections, drainage system and pump-

Final farewell to Springfield Gardens aviator legend

Clayton Lawrence, Tuskegee Airman who fought the Germans in World War II, remembered

BY JUAN SOTO

Queens said goodbye to one of its adopted and most famous sons.

Clayton Lawrence, a pioneering pilot member of the first group of African-American aviators who fought in World War II, died Sept. 8 at Jamaica Hospital due to cardiac arrest.

He was one of the bombardiers of the group that later became known as Tuskegee Airmen.

The wake for Lawrence was held at the Springfield Gardens United Methodist Church. Lawrence died Sept. 18. He was laid to rest at Calverton National Cemetery in Riverhead, L.I.

Lawrence was 90.

"He had a military ceremony," said Virginia Hardy, one of his daughters. "It was dignifying."

Lawrence, a Brooklyn native who moved to Springfield Gardens in 1955, was arrested when he protested against black officers not being permitted to enter the Freeman Army Airfield in Indiana in 1945.

During the so-called Freeman Field Mutiny, 162 black officers were arrested, some more than once, in an attempt to break down the racial barrier of the all-white men's club.

The episode, according to historians, contributed to the eventual desegregation of the Army.

Lawrence was one of the first black officers placed in the 477th Bomb Group. He was an active member of the National Organization of Turkegee Airman, Inc.

In 2007, President George W. Bush awarded about 300 Tuskegee Airmen, Lawrence included, the Congressional Gold Medal of Honor.

Lawrence also received a congressional award presented by U.S. Rep. Gregory Meeks (D-Jamaica).

The Tuskegee Airmen fought the Nazis internationally and discrimination domestically.

"They went to war and fought," Hardy said. "Then they came home and fought the second battle: racism."

Hardy said her father didn't talk much about his experience to her or her three siblings.

But when she was having difficulties with her advanced degree in administration, planning and social policy at Harvard University, Lawrence stepped in and told her about his struggles back then.

It was 1990.

"He basically never spoke about Tuskegee Airman until I had problems at school," said Hardy. "He then told me his story."

Hardy said the struggle his father and his fellow pilots went through "took my mind off my situation and I ended up graduating."

When Lawrence was discharged from active duty to the military reserves, he went back to school and earned a bachelor's degree in economics from Brooklyn College.

He was then called to serve as a bombardier in the B29's Strategic Air Command in the Korean War.

Lawrence met his wife, Mathilda, while at Brooklyn College. They married in 1949 right after graduation. They were together until Mathilda died in 1979. He was a tax assessor for the New York City Finance Administration for 27 years until he retired.

In 2012, Lawrence and other Tuskegee Airmen joined President Barack Obama for a screening of the film "Red Tails," a World War II movie profiling some of the Tuskegee veterans.

"They made their mark," his daughter said.

Criticism greets idea for soccer stadium on Aqueduct parking lot

BY SARINA TRANGLE

Major League soccer is not blowing the whistle on scoring a stadium in Queens.

Back when MLS announced its New York City Football Club franchise in May 2013, the TimesLedger Newspapers spotted three locations on its list of 24 potential stadium sites — a central Queens spot, an Astoria location and a lot adjacent to Aqueduct Race-track.

The club initially pursued plans for an elevated stadium in Flushing Meadows Corona Park, but dropped the bid amid stiff community opposition.

With the Bronx borough president beckoning the team to head north, it began negotiating for land near Yankee Stadium — the baseball team and an Abu Dhabi sheik co-own the club. But those familiar with the league's pursuit said talks stalled in the mainland borough.

Though other locations have been mentioned

The New York City Football Club is considering a parking lot near Aqueduct for its soccer stadium, elected officials say.

— state Sen. Joseph Addabbo (D-Howard Beach) said soccer officials visited him in Albany and raised the idea of a stadium near Belmont racetrack in Long Island; and urban planner Paul Graziano, who helped fight the park plan, said a western Staten Island site had been explored — many said the league seemed to have its sights on South Ozone Park.

In a statement, the club said only that it was reviewing several undisclosed locations.

Addabbo said MLS was interested in a parking lot south of the horse track, which he believed was owned by the city, but under a long-term lease agreement with Port Authority.

"It's city land, the mayor's office has every right to administer the property. But what do you do with the Port Authority lease, just break it?" asked Addabbo, who currently opposes

Miller out to curb illegal dollar vans

BY JUAN SOTO

Only days before a woman was injured while riding a commuter van in southeast Queens, City Councilman I. Daneek Miller (D-St. Albans), at a Primary Day campaign event in downtown Jamaica, asked one of his aides, "Did you see that? Take photos."

He was referring to "dollar vans" that were operating illegally and making U-turns in the middle of Archer Avenue to pick up passengers.

Now the lawmaker has asked the Taxi and Limousine Commission to improve the safety of the commuter van industry. He also wants law enforcement agencies to crack down on its illegal drivers.

"It is apparent that the Taxi and Limousine Commission...has ignored the need for safe and reliable transportation in southeast Queens," Miller said. "They have ignored our concerns, which we have expressed multiple times."

The legislator sent a letter to Meera Joshi, chairwoman of the TLC, in which he calls for a temporary suspension of all commuter van approvals and renewals.

Miller wants Joshi to "spearhead a reform of this industry that goes beyond surface measures."

The request was a response to a high speed chase by the NYPD of an illegal commuter van driver that left an innocent woman in the hospital after she jumped from the vehicle trying to escape on Sept. 14.

The TLC "has a strong track record of working closely with elected officials and community leaders to advance the goal of safer transportation," a spokesman for the city agency said. "We place a high value on their input on this as well as other issues, and we look forward to having productive discussions."

According to the TLC, so far this year 391 vans

Hit-and-run drivers to face harsher fines

BY BILL PARRY

Just five days shy of the one year anniversary of the death of her 19-year-old son, Luis Bravo, Marta Puruncajas clutched a portrait of him and wept as an announcement was made in the Red Room at City Hall. The Justice for Hit and Run Victims Act had been passed unanimously by the City Council Tuesday, drastically increasing the penalties for drivers involved in hit-and-runs in which a victim is seriously injured or killed.

Councilman Jimmy Van Bramer (D-Sunnyside), who proposed the legislation after three people were killed by hit-and-run drivers in his district in the last 18 months, said the bill would establish civil penalties of up to $10,000 for fleeing the scene of a collision. He then spoke of Bravo, 64-year-old Kumar Ragnath, who was struck and killed crossing Northern Boulevard in March and 20-year-old Karen Pheras, who was hit by a motorcyclist at Queens Plaza North in October.

"All lost their lives because of the unconscionable actions of reckless drivers who showed no concern for the lives of these three people," Van Bramer said. "We will never know if one or all of them could have been saved had the drivers done the right thing: stopped their car and called 911. With the passage of The Justice for Hit and Run Victims Act we are sending a message directly to hit-and-run drivers that leaving a fellow New Yorker to die in the streets is unconscionable, and if you do this, you will be punished."

After the announcement, Marta Puruncajas spoke of the death of her only son, who was struck and killed as he walked eastbound on Broadway in Woodside. Police never found the driver of the dark colored sedan who drove away from the scene.

"Since my son was killed, life has been impossible," she said. "I have a young daughter and I have to keep going for her, but in my heart I cry. I miss him in silence. It is a burden I carry from morning to night."

Van Bramer also honored representatives from Make Queens Safer with a Proclamation on behalf of the City Council. The group led a candlelight vigil and march through the street of Jackson Heights last fall and never stopped raising awareness by encouraging increased enforcement of traffic laws, safety-minded street design and deterring the actions of reckless driv-

Plaza College's heart pumps strong again

98-year-old institution moves to new Forest Hills facility after losing Jax Heights campus to fire

BY JUAN SOTO

Plaza College went from the agonizing tears of the fire that ripped through its campus in Jackson Heights in April to the tears of joy for inaugurating its state-of-the-art educational facility in Forest Hills.

The 98 year-old institution that offers business and medical degrees opened its doors back in July at the Forest Hills Tower, at 118-33 Queens Blvd., after it was forced to move out because of the April 21 massive fire.

Because of the destruction of the old campus, dozens of students took accelerated summers sessions to make up for time lost so they could graduate.

On Friday the campus held a ribbon cutting ceremony to mark a new beginning.

Borough President Melinda Katz grabbed the gigantic red scissors that perfectly matched the ribbon to officially opened the college.

The fall semester at the new location began with a student enrollment of more than 800 people.

Plaza College offers a bachelor's degree and five associate degrees in business, as well as a bachelor's and three associates in allied health.

"This is a story 100 years in the making," said Charles Callahan IV, master of ceremonies and grandson of the college's president, Charles Calahan.

Although Plaza College had planned to relocate its campus to two floors of the 17-story Forest Hills Tower, the college was able to accelerate the move because of the enormous cooperation from Muss Development LLC, the building's owner.

Katz presented a citation to the Muss family for making the move fast and possible.

"Plaza College is committed to this borough," Katz said. "It is an amazing asset for Queens."

College personnel, elected officials, students and other guests enjoyed the ceremony held at the college's outdoor garden that included live music from a pianist and a catered lunch.

During the event, people remembered the massive fire that engulfed Plaza College and 50 businesses back in April in the Bruson Building at 74-09 37th Ave. in Jackson Heights.

"That night, the night of the fire, there was a will to survive," said Callahan, who is also director of strategic initiatives.

The campus has new medical classrooms and laboratories, a campus store, a cafe and a student commons that leads to the outdoor pavilion.

"The new home for Plaza College is nothing but electrifying," said Melinda Negron, a business management senior. "This is only the beginning."

Rego Park kitchen distributes meals ahead of Rosh Hashana

BY ALEX ROBINSON

City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito (D-Manhattan) came to Rego Park Tuesday evening to tour a Masbia Soup Kitchen, which provided more than 500 families with food packages the day before Rosh Hashana, the Jewish new year.

Mark-Viverito was joined by Council members Karen Koslowitz (D-Forest Hills), Mark Weprin (D-Oakland Gardens) and Rory Lancman (D-Fresh Meadows), who took turns delivering food to hungry Queensites.

The Masbia Soup Kitchen expected to distribute more than 1,200 food packages and countless kosher meals to families for the holidays from its three locations, two of which are in Brooklyn. The Rego Park site, at 98-08 Queens Blvd., serves a large low-income Bhukarian Jewish population.

"Hunger does not discriminate - and the high cost of kosher food means that many of the Jewish poor face additional hardship," said Margarette Purvis, president of the Food Bank for New York City.

The facility offers food to the hungry year round and is open Sunday through Thursday. Food packages are given out on Thursdays from 11 a.m. until 8 p.m., except during the holidays, when they are distributed on Tuesdays. The dining area, which serves hot meals, is open from 3 p.m. until 8 p.m.

The packages contain Lepeshka, a Bhukarian Jewish round bread or challah, honey for Rosh Hashana celebrations, vegetables and chicken.

The number of meals and food packages the center gives out keeps growing every year, said Alex Rapa-port, the executive director of Masbia, which has been open for just under five years.

"It doesn't look like poverty and hunger are going away any time soon so help like this is needed," he

Costa takes center stage in city's climate strategy

BY BILL PARRY

New York City took center stage of the planet's climate change crisis and a city councilman from Astoria was the point man.

Costa Constantinides' (D-Astoria) bill to reduce carbon emissions became part of the Council's platform to combat climate change Friday, assuring its passage and Mayor Bill de Blasio advanced the legislation Sunday after an estimated 400,000 people took part in the People's Climate Change March on Manhattan's West Side.

"Climate change is the overarching issue here and it was very humbling to see 400,000 people coming to-them almost entirely by the end of the century.

Qns Village man irking neighbors with nude pics

BY KELSEY DURHAM

A family in Queens Village says they are being harassed by a neighbor who has been posting pornographic images in a window facing their home for more than two years.

Sanjeev Aggarwal, who lives on 233rd Street just south of Union Turnpike, moved into his home in 2012 and has been battling with his neighbor ever since. After getting into an argument with him the day he moved in, Aggarwal said his nasty neighbor has been committing annoyances every day for the past two years, including posting the X-rated images on a window inside his home that faces out toward the Aggarwals' house.

"The first day, I was cleaning my sidewalk and his got a little dirty, so I told him I would clean it up for him," Aggarwal said of his neighbor, whom he only refers to as Jimmy. "He started cursing me out and calling me names, so I said there's no point in talking to him and I put up a fence."

Aggarwal said Jimmy made derogatory comments to him that day about his Indian race, and he said he believes the efforts his neighbor has made in an attempt to disturb them ever since are related to his family's Indian heritage. Jimmy could not be reached for comment about why he was posting the images.

Soon after the fence went up between the two houses, Aggarwal said his neighbor began putting the pornographic pictures in his window, holding them up to face the window the Aggarwals can see from their upstairs.

"He started putting nude pictures up and eventually I had enough," Aggarwal said. "My son is only 4, and you can see these pictures from the street."

Aggarwal said he called the police several times and officers from the 105th Precinct would instruct Jimmy to take the photos down, but Aggarwal said he would put them back up as soon as the police left. He said he then hung a sheet on a clothesline in between the two homes, causing his neighbor to escalate to other antics.

"When the sheet went up, his new thing was throwing garbage over the fence into my yard," Aggarwal said. "The police told me to put up security cameras, so I spent my own money to do that and then he had to think of something else, so he started peeing under the fence so it came into my yard."

Aggarwal said he has tried writing to community leaders and elected officials as well as continuing to complain to the Police Department, but he said most responses he gets say that because Jimmy is posting the photos in the privacy of his own home, the law limits what action can be taken to stop him. He said he has even tried to make amends with Jimmy, but his neighbor wanted no part of a truce.

"I tried to tell him, let's just shake hands and start over on a better note, but he told me that's not the way it works," Aggarwal said. "I feel helpless in my own home. I can't even enjoy my own property because of this guy."

Aggarwal said he will continue to file complaints about Jimmy and hope that someone is able to put an end to the problem. He said he is ready to make peace with his neighbor and hopes he soon feels the same.

"Whatever the argument is, let's work it out and move on," he said. "Just let me live my life."

Crowley tackles sepsis with bill to honor Rory

BY BILL PARRY

U.S. Rep. Joe Crowley (D-Jackson Heights) announced plans to introduce legislation named after a Sunnyside schoolboy who died two years ago. Rory Staunton was just 12 years old when a scrape became infected and caused his death from sepsis after doctors failed to diagnose it in time.

According to the Mayo Clinic, sepsis is a potentially life-threatening complication of an infection that occurs when chemicals released into the bloodstream to fight the infection trigger inflammatory responses throughout the body. This inflammation can set off a cascade of changes that can damage multiple organ systems, causing them to fail, killing over 250,000 Americans each year.

“Even one death from sepsis is one death too many, and the time is now for the federal government to take a comprehensive and concerted approach to preventing and treating sepsis nationwide,” Crowley said. “It is my hope that between this legislation and a congressional caucus focused on elevating the issue of sepsis, we can start to make significant headway in treating and preventing this terrible condition.”

The Rory Staunton CARE for Sepsis Act would direct the federal government to increase public outreach to fight sepsis, a leading cause of death in the United States, striking 750,000 people every year. The bill will focus on increasing interagency coordination, raising national attention through public awareness efforts, expanding research and development to better treat sepsis, and improving education for medical professionals to increase early intervention.

came seriously ill in March 2012 when he fell in a school gym and cut his arm while playing basketball. When the cut turned into pain in the leg and vomiting, his parents, Ciaran and Orlaith, took their son to their pediatrician, who recommended Rory go to NYU Langone Medical Center in Manhattan for rehydration.

The hospital rehydrated Rory and released him, but blood tests were not seen by the doctor and not complete until after his release. His condition worsened and his pediatrician sent him back to the hospital, where he was put in intensive care. Doctors tried to revive Rory three times before he died April 1.

Rory's uncle, Niall O'Dowd, in an open letter to President Obama wrote, “Sepsis kills more Americans than AIDS, prostate cancer and breast cancer combined and that it contributes to one in every three deaths in U.S. hospitals costing the U.S. economy $20 billion per year.”

Crowley announced that he will be forming a new congressional caucus to bring together members of Congress, families, and advocates to exchange ideas and address policy concerns. He announced these actions while delivering the opening remarks at the Sepsis: Defeating the Killer national forum, hosted Sept. 17 by the Rory Staunton Foundation in Washington.

“This legislation will go a long way toward helping save lives, and I know Rory would be proud,” Ciaran Staunton said.

Crowley was among the 1,000 mourners who attended Rory's funeral in April 2012 at Woodside's St. Mary's Winfield Church.

“Rory Staunton's desire to help make the world a better place, even at such a young age, was inspiring, and with these new congressional efforts, we can help do the same in his honor,” Crowley said. “As much as I'm looking forward to working with all of you on this important cause, I'm even more looking forward to the last national forum on sepsis, when we've put a stop to this killer once and for all.”

POLICE Blotter

Police looking for Elmhurst assault suspect

ELMHURST — Police from the 110th Precinct were asking for the public's help in finding an individual who was wanted in connection with a sexual assault. On Sept. 18, around 1:30 p.m., a male suspect followed a 30-year-old female into an elevator of a building, though the NYPD did not provide an address. The suspect approached the female and pressed himself onto the victim. There were no injuries as a result of the assault.

Pair suspected in Jackson Hts store robbery

JACKSON HEIGHTS — Police from the 115th Precinct were looking for a male and female wanted in connection with a grand larceny that occurred around 7 p.m. Aug. 21. The suspects entered Omkar Jewellers at 37-50 74th St. and while the female suspect distracted the clerk, the male suspect reached over the counter and removed a jewelry tray containing four bangle bracelets, according to the NYPD. The jewelry was worth around $10,000.

This image shows two people suspected of a robbery at a Jackson Heights store.

Police say the male suspect is described as a 5-foot-10 Hispanic wearing a blue baseball hat, white shorts and a red shirt. The female suspect is described as a 5-foot-4 Hispanic weighing 180 pounds, wearing glasses, a black blouse and gray jeans.

Bus crashes into Queens Village Papa John's

QUEENS VILLAGE — A Nassau County bus driver swerved to avoid a bicyclist and crashed into a Queens Village Papa John's Pizza early Saturday, the franchise owner and FDNY said.

Asad Azhar said he rushed to his 89-53 Francis Lewis Blvd. business after an employee called around 1 a.m. Saturday to alert him that the bus had slammed into the pizzeria.

The employee had rushed to the back of the store and was OK, Azhar said.

The Fire Department said it did not take anyone to the hospital, but had crews on the scene from about 1:25 a.m. to nearly 5 a.m.

But the Papa John's sustained heavy damage and will be closed for three to four weeks, according to Azhar.

Event offers new look at Kaufman Studios

BY BILL PARRY

More than 10,000 movie buffs made their way to the Kaufman Astoria Studios Sunday when the Hollywood-style gates were thrown open to the public for "New York On Location," a free daylong street fair that offered a behind-the-scenes look at film production. While storm clouds threatened, the only rain that fell on the backlot were man-made, produced by the studio's special effects people.

"I think it's awesome, a great opportunity for the average people to see what goes into the magic of film," KAS Vice President Tracy Capune said. Over 20 working movie trailers and trucks were parked along the backlot and 35th Avenue and visitors were allowed looks inside.

There was a makeup demonstration featuring a young man transforming himself into an old woman. Stunt performers demonstrated street fighting, high falls and high-speed car maneuvers. The latest in camera, lighting and sound equipment were also on display.

Visitors were able to speak directly with movie professionals about what they do on set. "It's a fun and engaging way for families and kids to experience what goes on behind the scenes," KAS President Hal Rosenbluth said.

Laura and Stan, a couple from Astoria, watched the stunt drivers, saying they had walked past the massive studio all the time. "We always wondered what went on in here," Stan said. "They don't normally do tours here so it was nice that they opened it up."

Two young women from Denmark, Alberte and Amalie, said it was the first time they had ever been inside a film studio. They were among 30 riders taking part in a Bike The Big Apple sight-seeing outing run by the bicycle-riding tour guide Jesse McDonough.

"They wanted to see the studio and that's just fine by me," McDonough said. "People usually want to see the sights in Brooklyn and Manhattan but Queens is generating more interest these days."

Mary Beth Fox came from Brooklyn with her husband Joe and their two young children.

"I'm a casting director with Teamsters Local 817," she said. "It's been fun to show my family what the industry is like, what Mommy does for a living. They found it fascinating."

Omar from Elmhurst said his favorite part was

Habitat for Humanity hands Laurelton house keys to civil servant

BY SARINA TRANGLE

For months, Voncille Chaney drove past a two-story house on 220th Place, scouring for clues about how the dilapidated structure would look when Habitat for Humanity finished.

Chaney, a city Department of Education employee, seemed at ease when she received the keys to a refurbished, sand-colored home Saturday.

But her 11-year-old son Ahmai busied himself inspecting the Laurelton property, asking to try out a hose in the backyard, peeking into the oven and inquiring about how kitchen appliances worked.

"He's excited. He wants to play in everything," Chaney said of her son, who she forbade from hanging out outside of their former East New York home. "It's dangerous and my son couldn't go outside to play."

Dozens of volunteers with Habitat for Humanity NYC, an affiliate of the national organization dedicated to constructing affordable homes for families in need, Wells Fargo, Dabar Bethlehem Cathedral parishioners and neighbors welcomed the Chaney family to the two-bedroom at 137-35 220th Place.

Neil Hetherington, CEO of the city Habitat chapter, said the organization bought about a dozen homes in southern Queens for $1 from the New York City Housing Authority and was negotiating the purchase of about 30 others clustered in southern Queens and Brooklyn.

The homes, once in a federal housing program and then rented out by NYCHA, had been foreclosed on about 15 years ago when NYCHA deemed them too expensive to operate.

"The young lady over on the step, the neighbor, she's been complaining about this house for a long time," said City Councilman Donovan Richards (D-Far Rockaway). "When homes go into foreclosure... it depreciates the community in a sense. So when you do something like this, you're creating a better quality of life."

Habitat for Humanity was able to secure the properties at a steep discount because it reserves them for affordable housing by ensuring all homeowners earn no more than 120 percent of the area median income, according to Hetherington. They must also have enough income to afford the homes and demonstrate a need for assistance.

"Then you get to the pivotal moment of a family's life," he said. "This is the moment when Voncille and her son broke the cycle of poverty by building up an asset."

Chaney said she decided to apply for assistance from Habitat NYC after learning the organization was repairing houses near her childhood home of Hollis.

Last July, she received an email informing her she was accepted into a homeownership program and that she would need to complete 200 hours of "sweat equity" by helping the Habitat volunteers that do interior construction once professionals repair the exterior shells of homes.

Since then, Chaney said she frequently cruised along 220th Place to gauge the progress.

"I've been doing drive-bys," she said, describing its transition from an eyesore to a pristine property. "It was always my dream to move back to a home in Queens and I didn't think I could do it, but with the help of Habitat for Humanity, we're here."

Katz and Curtis Sliwa pleased child support lawsuit dismissed

BY SARINA TRANGLE

A judge dismissed Mary Sliwa's fraud case against her ex-husband, Guardian Angel Curtis Sliwa, and his partner, Borough President Melinda Katz, which attempted to recoup more than $500,000 in child support payments he made to Katz when the Sliwas had shared finances.

According to the suit, Katz and Curtis Sliwa had a child in 2008 and a second in 2011, with the two claiming the borough president was impregnated using his frozen sperm. At the time, Mary Sliwa did not object to the initial $8,000 monthly child support payments to Katz, but she later realized they were larger than required, according to court documents.

In her Sept. 19 decision, Lori Sattler wrote that Mary Sliwa was bound by the financial terms in a 2011 separation agreement unless she could prove she was defrauded before or while the document was negotiated.

"She states that she 'could not believe that [Defendant Sliwa] would willing have children with another woman while married to her' and believed defendant's statements that the children were conceived against his will with 10-year-old frozen sperm,"

A judge dismissed a fraud case against Curtis Sliwa (l.) and Borough President Melinda Katz (r.) stemming from disagreements over child support payments.

the decision reads. "However, the plaintiff knew then that defendants were living together and that she had been monitoring their movements for some time. Plaintiff was thus fully aware of the defendants' relationship, including the birth of their older child and the child support being paid, years before she executed a complete release of all claims."

Katz's and Sliwa's attorney Steven Mintz said they were grateful for the dismissal.

"As Melinda has repeatedly said to everybody in the situation, the important thing is the well-being of the children that were involved and she's glad the parties can all move on to focus on that goal now," Mintz said.

Mary Sliwa's attorney could not immediately be reached for comment.

Police investigate six shootings in boro: NYPD

BY SARINA TRANGLE

Police had not made any arrests at midweek in shootings last weekend that sent four men scrambling inside an East Elmhurst home, a woman running for cover along an Edgemere street and a man wounded outside a South Richmond Hill lounge this weekend, the NYPD said.

The Police Department said they were first called to East Elmhurst at 9:50 p.m. Friday, where two men wearing black hooded sweatshirts and bandanas over their faces greeted those gathered on a stoop and released a barrage of bullets.

Two brothers and two friends were hit as they ran toward a home on 106th Street near Northern Boulevard, according to police and a relative.

Pedro Fernandez, whose two sons were injured, said his children and their companions were expected to recover.

"They were outside drinking a couple of beers," Fernandez said, when two men wearing hooded sweatshirts and cloth obstructing their faces approached. "One said to my son, 'What's up?' and that was it. They started shooting."

Police said a 25-year-old man was hit in the back and a bullet grazed his head, a 24-year-old was shot in the right eye, a 30-year-old was struck in the back and a bullet nicked his head, and a 24-year-old's arm was brushed by a bullet.

All were taken to Elmhurst Hospital, according to police.

The NYPD said descriptions of the suspects were sketchy due to their attire.

Four men were shot on the steps of an East Elmhurst home Sept. 19, the NYPD said.

Police said three of the four victims had been arrested on marijuana possession or sales charges in the past. But the NYPD had not yet established a motive or make any arrests.

Still Fernandez said he had no idea why his family was targeted.

"I have been here five years, never has nothing like this happened before. I'm scared to go back to the house," he said, noting that his family may need to stay in a shelter or rely on relatives before saving up for a new home. "I have to move."

Officers were also investigating shots fired in Rockaway Friday night. Police said a bullet brushed across a 24-year-old woman's head as she walked along Beach 54th Street at 10:46 p.m.

The NYPD said the woman heard gunfire, began running and then noticed her head was bleeding.

Police said she was brought to Jamaica Hospital with minor injuries.

No arrests had been made, according to the NYPD.

And early Saturday morning police were called to a South Richmond Hill lounge on Liberty Avenue near 123rd Street, where the NYPD said a 28-year-old was shot in the torso at about 3:55 a.m. Saturday.

Cops said two groups got into a dispute inside the club, some were kicked out and a crowd began to gather in front of the venue.

A man then drove up and fired at the victim, according to police.

Officers said it was not clear if he was the intended victim.

The 28-year-old was brought to Jamaica Hospital in critical but stable condition, the NYPD said.

Police said the suspect, a white male, drove west on Liberty Avenue.

The NYPD said it had not made any arrests.

Vice President Joe Biden caused a stir in Queens and beyond with his pronouncement a few months ago that LaGuardia is a Third World airport. But he must not be a frequent traveler to Kennedy Airport, which sometimes welcomes arriving passengers with the kind of service expected in a developing nation.

When a recent flight from the flashy British Airways terminal at Heathrow in London landed at JFK, Kennedy rolled out all the stops for the crush of foreign visitors. The passengers were herded down a flight of stairs into a very long hallway, which turned out to be the entrance to the baggage section. Hundreds of weary travelers were required to stand in line waiting for immigration officials to process them for at least 30 minutes.

An airport official passing through the crowded hallway remarked that some of the immigration officers had not showed up for work. Whether true or not, it was not the kind of scene that made returning New Yorkers proud. In fact, this version of the Big Apple's welcome mat was downright embarrassing.

The contrast to the sleek operations at the British Airways terminal, where passengers are whisked through some of the tightest security on the planet and then directed to their gates via rapid escalators or modern elevators, was stark.

Both Delta and JetBlue have opened modern terminals at JFK in recent years, but the overall image of the airport is still unavoidable: Kennedy is a dowager in dire need of a face-lift.

Biden's assessment of JFK's neighbor to the north may have inspired Gov. Cuomo to announce the state would assume control of a $3.6 billion project to redevelop LaGuardia and construction at Kennedy from the Port Authority. The move was widely applauded by frustrated New Yorkers, who know all too well that first impressions count.

The governor must use his power to see that the modernization of Queens' two airports continues. And the pressure should be intensified on the Port Authority, which operates both airports, to spend a bigger chunk of the revenue they generate on redesigning this gateway to New York City.

The city that has been romanticized in film and glorified in novels loses some of its aura when the visitor lands in Queens at an airport that belongs on the Turner Classics Movie channel. Has filmmaker Woody Allen, who has an enduring love affair with New York, ever shot a romantic sequel at JFK or LaGuardia?

When did politics become so ugly and divisive?

Calling them “extreme conservatives,” Gov. Andrew Cuomo blasted conservative Republican New Yorkers earlier this year, telling them they have no place in New York state. More recently Nancy Pelosi said: “Civilization as we know it today would be in jeopardy if the Republicans win the Senate.” In ugly campaign ads and lies, the NYS Democratic Party has repeatedly slammed Republican gubernatorial candidate Rob Astorino as an “extremist” and perhaps it won’t be long before congressional candidate Grant Lally is labeled a rightwing extremist.

The “extremist” mantra is one of the three big lies that many incumbent Democrat politicians use as their re-election campaign strategy to paint Republicans as bigoted and dangerous in order to win votes by demonization. The three lies repeated incessantly are that Republicans are extremists, racists, and only care about the rich. Goebbels said, “If you repeat a lie often enough, people will believe it” and Democrats have been repeating these lies for nearly 20 years and unfortunately they’ve stuck. It’s straight out of Saul Alinsky’s playbook, the forth rule: “Ridicule is man’s most potent weapon.”

Since when did the political arena become so ugly and divisive? By and large, the great modern partisan divide took off in the aftermath of the U.S. presidential election in 2000 between Texas Gov. George W. Bush and Vice President Al Gore. The election results hinged on Florida, where an extremely close race ended in weeks of legal battles over the recounting of votes. A Supreme Court decision ended the recount, awarding the Florida electoral votes and the presidency to Bush.

The left screamed “unfair,” that the voters not the courts should have decided the election. Although he disagreed with the Supreme Court verdict, Gore ended his campaign “for the sake of unity as a people and the strength of our democracy” and said “partisan rancor must now be put aside.” Bush declared that the “nation must rise above a house divided.”

Regrettably, the house remained divided and the bitterness and resentment intensified. Leftwing Democrats felt cheated and declared it was an illegitimate election and that democracy doesn’t work. Angry and embittered, they vowed that the system was broken and planned to avenge their loss by ultimately seizing control of the Democrat Party and ruling by fiat. That is why today, indicative of their plan to destroy the opposition, Nancy Pelosi can say with a straight face that Republican rule will destroy America. President Obama often uses his executive powers to bypass Congress and rule by executive fiat.

Today leftist progressives dominate the Democrat Party and repeat endless lies, run false campaign attack ads, denounce their opponents as racists and extremists, and refuse to debate as in the race between Cuomo and Astorino. Once they eliminate the opposition, they can put their extreme progressive agenda into place, “fundamentally transforming the United States of America,” as Obama declared. Their objective is to dispose of the values that made America the greatest nation in the world.

The extreme progressives are an outspoken minority who believe they should make the rules for all of us. They believe they know best that the minimum wage should be $15 per hour; that because specialized high schools are not diverse enough, the tests need to be dumbed down; that all schoolchildren will learn best with a universal one-size-fits-all curriculum; that everyone will be safer if cops react to violent crime rather than confront it before it occurs; that bigger, more expensive government is better for society; and the list goes on and on.

However, the vast majority of the American public cherishes the ideals and values that made America great and don’t believe in the extremist progressive agenda. They believe in American ideals, merit, family, self sufficiency, and law and order. The vast majority are not extremists or racists, contrary to the race hustlers’ accusations that racism is rampant in America. They value hard work, education, self-sacrifice, and service to our nation.

With the help of the media and academic elites, the progressive left creates the myth that Republicans are the bad guys. If the majority of Americans learned the truth and voted, the extreme progressives would be an endangered species. As Senator Frank Padavan used to say: “You’re all Republicans, you just don’t know it.”

U. S. Rep. Steve Israel’s bill would reduce testing in schools

Last week I announced a way to reduce excessive standardized tests as part of Common Core while preserving the quality of learning and teaching in our classrooms. My proposal was developed over the course of several months by school superintendents and educators throughout our communities.

I believe we are testing our kids to extremes and robbing them of their creativity and curiosity. Classrooms are meant to be challenging incubators for learning and expression, not test-taking factories. Unfortunately, many classrooms today are void of teaching innovation and critical thinking because teachers and students are burdened by preparing for excessive standardized tests that promote learning through retention rather than learning by experience.

A common sense pace of testing is essential to ensure that our students are learning what is being taught and that schools are effectively educating. But we cannot designate standardized test scores as the one predictor of future success for our students, teachers, and school districts. Learning is a deeply personal experience, and we should be giving our teachers and students the classroom time they need in order to facilitate experiential learning.

That is why, with the help of Long Island superintendents, I am introducing the Tackling Excessive Standardized Testing Act that allows states to choose an alternative testing schedule for students in grades 3 through 8. The TEST Act reduces the number of tests students must take each year and ultimately gives time back to educators to teach science, social studies, art, music and other subjects whose lessons are being cut short in order to prepare for testing.

Allotting the necessary time to foster a classroom atmosphere more conducive to creativity and collaboration will help relieve some of the stress that testing places on students and teachers. It is simply common sense to allow states to be able to choose an alternative testing schedule for students that curbs the amount of tests they have to take while still reflecting their abilities and the effectiveness of school districts.

I have two adult daughters. One is involved in marketing for the pharmaceutical industry. The other is pursuing a career in sustainable agriculture. In other words, one is in Pharma and the other a Farmer.

Excessive standardized tests could not possibly measure the potential and the needs that each had in pursuing their dreams.

We should test less and enrich more.

Flushing-born Drescher got famous on 'The Nanny'

The Greater Astoria Historical Society

Actress, producer and activist Francine Drescher was born in Flushing on Sept. 30, 1957.

After debuting in the 1977 blockbuster "Saturday Night Fever," Drescher slowly built her career with small film roles in the 1970s and '80s. She burst onto the Hollywood scene with her own TV sitcom "The Nanny" in 1993 and has appeared in some 30 movies and more than 20 television shows.

Her latest production was the television comedy "Happily Divorced," based upon her own separation after 21 years from former husband and actor Peter Marc Jacobson. The actress from Queens is a cancer survivor and well-known on screen for her pronounced New York accent.

The youngest of two children, Drescher grew up in Kew Gardens Hills and attended Hillcrest High School with actor Ray Romano. She developed an interest in acting in junior high, and in 1973 she was the first runner-up for Miss New York Teenager.

Following high school,

Drescher and future husband Jacobson supported themselves as discount hairdressers while pursuing acting gigs in Manhattan.

The first break for the girl from Kew Gardens Hills came with a small speaking role opposite John Travolta in "Saturday Night Fever," and in the 1980s she appeared as a comic actress in movies such as "Gorp" and "This is Spinal Tap."

At the same time, Drescher began to make a name for herself on prime time television with guest appearances on shows including "Silver Spoons," "Who's the Boss?" and "Night Court."

It was "The Nanny," which ran from 1993-99, which made her a star. Produced by Drescher and Jacobson, the show cast Fran-as charming and outgoing New York nanny Fran Fine.

The actress developed an interest in acting while in junior high, and she attended high school with actor and comedian Ray Romano.

The actress with the trademark New York voice was nominated for two Emmys and two Golden Globes for her performance during the six-year run. She built on her fame and success with film appearances alongside Robin Williams in Francis Ford Coppola's comedy-drama "Jack," and with Woody Allen in the 2000 black comedy "Picking up the Pieces."

Before producing and starring in "Happily Divorced" from 2011-13, the Queens native appeared in television shows including "Entourage" and "Law & Order: Criminal Intent" and lent her voice to a character on "The Simpsons."

Off screen, Drescher gives her time to a variety of causes. She has been supportive of LGBT issues since her ex-husband came out as homosexual after their divorce, and as a cancer survivor she is an advocate of early screening and awareness of the symptoms of the dreadful disease.

Drescher has penned two New York Times-best-selling books, including "Cancer Schmancer," an account of her successful battle with uterine cancer, and started an awareness group called the Cancer Schmancer Movement.

In recognition of her efforts, in 2008 President George W. Bush appointed the diehard Democrat as public diplomacy envoy for women's health issues, and Drescher has travelled the globe advocating women's health and patient rights.

In recognition of her multitude of talents and unique, straight-out-of-Queens character, some fans joke that Drescher is a "Russell": she has the comic timing of Rosalind Russell, the curves of Jane Russell and the tenacity of a jack Russell!

Avella victory shows independence from party

William Lewis
Political Action

In the recently concluded Democratic Party primary election in the 11th State Senate district of northeast Queens in which incumbent Tony Avella won by 568 votes, not including proxy votes, the race had several important aspects to it.

If Avella's opponent, John Liu, had won, it would have strengthened the political authority of Queens Democratic County Chairman Joseph Crowley, especially in regards to his influence with the other Queens Democratic state senators and how they voted on various legislation. It would have made Crowley a very strong county leader in terms of implementing county policy decisions.

By Avella winning the primary, however, it showed that incumbent officer holders can act independently of their party organization. In the case of Avella, he worked with the Independent Democratic Conference in Albany and became a member of the organization, which worked with Republicans in the state Senate.

The Democratic Party county leadership got the entire membership of its County Executive Committee present to vote in favor of a primary against Avella. It seems doubtful that the full Democratic County Executive Committee would vote unanimously again for another primary against Avella in 2016.

Most Democratic Party office holders in Queens, once elected, remain in office for a considerable length of time. There have been few primaries. In Avella's case, he has served four years in the state Senate.

Before being elected to the City Council, Avella had served as chief of staff to state Sen. Toby Ann Stavisky. He was a member of the City Council and ran in the Democratic primary for mayor before running for the state Senate in 2010 against Frank Padavan.

In making the race for mayor, Avella was able to increase his name recognition, build his campaign organization and gain fund-raising capabilities. All of these things helped him immensely in the 2010 state Senate run, where he won an upset race.

Avella has been active in politics most of his life and apparently intends to continue his career.

The Democratic Party

By Avella winning the primary, however, it showed that incumbent office holders can act independently of their party organization.

in Queens currently controls all the elected offices except for one City Council seat. That means Democratic officials now occupy all the offices for U.S. Congress, state Senate, and state Assembly, in addition to borough president and district attorney.

The Queens Republican Party has been reorganizing since the unfortunate death of its county leader, Philip Ragusa. The new county chairman is attorney Robert Beltrani, who previously served as county executive vice chairman.

Although the Queens

Republican Party only controls one elected office, nevertheless a significant number of members are optimistic about political opportunities in the future. They are particularly positive about winning the U.S. presidency and U.S. Senate in 2016. Many Republican Party activists believe that a strong showing in the presidency and Senate will help Republican candidates in local races.

Next year, 2015, will be an off political year with the only races for public office being for judgeships and county district attorney.

The Queens Republican Party next year will be having its convention of the county committee to elect county officers to lead the county party in the two-year period after that.

Next year will be the time to build and organize the county party structure in both major parties and the third parties as well, including the Conservative and Working Families parties.

It is hoped that interest in political campaigns will increase in 2016 and that there is more participation by the general electorate.

New basketball court at Baisley Houses ready for action

Site where former NBA star Mark Jackson shot hoops as teen before St. John's gets $600K redesign

BY JUAN SOTO

The Baisley Park Houses in South Jamaica have become a training ground for the next LeBron James --- again.

Last Friday the once dilapidated basketball court and playground was officially opened and transformed into a new repaved basketball court.

The redevelopment of the recreational facility cost about $600,000.

Built in 1961, the basketball court kept its original concrete floor until this renovation. But the backboards were changed once in 1999.

"Everyone from south-east Queens used to come to play at Baisely," said A.U. Hogan, president of the Baisley Houses Tenants' Association. "Mark Jackson came here to play ball from two miles away," he added, referring to the NBA coach and onetime New York Knicks player.

Hogan also said that James Carter, who later played for the Puerto Rico national team in the 1990s, played basketball at Baisely as a kid.

Carter played against Michael Jordan and the rest of the U.S. squad in the 1994 Goodwill Games at Madison Square Garden.

"He [Carter] lived in the building right in front of the courts," Hogan said. "I taught him to play when he was 11."

The money for the renovation of the basketball court and the playground was allocated "through the collective efforts" of City Councilman Ruben Wills (D-Jamaica), state Assemblywoman Vivian Cook (D-Jamaica), the New York City Housing Authority and residents of the eight-building housing complex.

"The people of Baisley have long deserved a space like the one we unveiled," Wills said. "They hadn't seen improvements to their recreation area for over a generation, and that type of decay causes too many of our youth to be indifferent to their community's care."

The groundbreaking for the construction of the redesigned basketball court was in April.

"This restoration is about more than basketball and benches," the lawmaker said. "It's about restoring their accountability for their own community's preservation."

The new basketball court has a new chain link fencing, benches, posts, fiberglass backboards, hoops and waste bins.

The children and young men of the Baisley Park Houses are already enjoying the modern and colorful playground that includes a water sprinkler and protective surfacing.

"This is a perfect example of what collective action between a community, its elected representatives, and its government can achieve when united in common cause," Cook said.

Kids from the housing complex and the surrounding neighborhood attended the ribbon cutting ceremony presided over by Wills, Cook and Hogan.

"This new court means a lot for the kids," said Hogan. "In the old court, people got injured, there was gravel."

The Baisley Houses used to hold basketball tournaments every year until 2004.

"Now, with the new court, we will organize tournaments once again," Hogan said.

Laurelton students reunite 44 years later

BY JUAN SOTO

They moved out of Laurelton back in the 1970s, leaving their beloved neighborhood physically behind.

But they kept an emotional attachment to the community they grew up in.

And this past week, a group of men and women came back to the streets and the school they all met at and shared their experiences with the student body, ages 4 to 14.

They had entered their pre-K class in 1964.

A total of 16 alumni from PS 156 who graduated from fifth grade in 1970 went back to their former classrooms and met with current students from pre-K to eighth-grade classes.

"All the families moved out," said Gerald Antell, a real estate investor who left Laurelton more than 40 years ago.

Some stayed in the city, but others started new lives in places like Ohio, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Miami.

"After Laurelton, we scattered all over the country," he said.

"The place was becoming dangerous and we all basically moved out," said the alumnus. "But we were and still are connected to the neighborhood."

During the visit, Antell, who now lives in Scarsdale, N.Y., and his former classmates met with the school's principal, talked with students and had lunch in the school's library.

"The school was excellent. It's a beautiful place," he said. "They even gave us lunch."

Antell said the principal was "stunned" when she heard about the visit. "She was very thrilled and surprised."

In pairs of two, the alumni met with students from all the grades taught at the educational facility.

They shared their experiences with the kids who now sit where they did once. The group also spoke with the students about their careers, their current positions and their chosen or not chosen lines of work.

Among other professions, the group included an architect, a nurse, doctors, teachers and accountants.

"The students were happy to see us there," said Antell. "Some of them asked us how was the school when we were the students. They were very curious."

Antell said they showed the kids several photos when they were the students.

"They all seemed interested in us," said Antell.

The group also gathered at the school five years ago for a similar experience.

Tenure suit rolls on

Two PS 101 parents announced they are signing onto a lawsuit seeking to overturn state teacher tenure laws because of a teacher at the Forest Hills Gardens school.

Laurie Townsend and Christine Gendreau said they decided to join the Partnership for Educational Justice's suit against the state because they were distraught to see Richard Parlini back in the classroom after the DOE said it substantiated six claims of misconduct against him. The department said he was fined $2,500 and given anger management training, but parents protested when he returned to the classroom this fall. The DOE then transferred him to an administrative position.

Townsend said Parlini pushed her son to the ground.

"I can't believe that the laws in New York state would allow a teacher who has mistreated children to come back to the classroom with just a slap on the wrist," she said.

Parlini could not be reached for comment.

Gendreau contended the teacher teased her son.

DOE spokeswoman Devora Kaye said the department put a priority on safe school environments.

JFK skycaps secure deal

Skycaps at John F. Kennedy International Airport landed some good news.

State Attorney General Eric Schneiderman announced a $925,000 settlement with the company that underpaid about 40 airport workers between 2008 and 2014.

According to Schneiderman, Alstate Maintenance paid the Skycaps "as little as $3.90 per hour," an amount that is below the minimum wage ranging from $7.15 to $8 per hour during the six years covered by the investigation.

"I am committed to combating wage theft wherever and whenever we see it," the attorney general said. "Airlines and the companies that operate our airports should make certain that the contractors they hire act responsibly."

Schneiderman said the investigation began when several of the workers notified Local 32BJ, the Service Employee International Union, that they were not earning at least the minimum wage.

The settlement with Alstate includes reforms "to ensure that its workers are properly compensated," the AG said.

Public Advocate Letitia James agreed with the calls for reforms.

"Many airport employees continue to be grossly underpaid, and it is particularly egregious that this contractor paid Skycaps below the legal minimum wage," she said.

Skycaps received tips from passenger, but according to Schneiderman, the company failed to qualify for a tip credit "which would allow the company to pay workers at a lower hourly rate."

The settlement consists of $625,000 in restitution money and $300,000 in damages, said the attorney general.

CB 5 recoils at Ridgewood party plans

BY SARINA TRANGLE

Vacant factories and liquor licenses are a toxic cocktail, as Community Board 5 sees it.

CB 5, which covers Ridgewood, Maspeth, Middle Village and Glendale, unanimously voted against a second application for a 600-person-plus liquor license within a year, Chairman Vincent Arcuri Jr. said.

Justin Carter, a disc jockey known for the roving dance parties called Mister Saturday Night and Mister Sunday, submitted paperwork seeking a license to serve beer and wine to 600 or more patrons at 56-06 Cooper Ave. The document notes the unnamed venue may feature recorded music, live music, DJs, dancing and a bar. It is described as a seasonal establishment with garden grounds.

The vacant factory at 56-06 Cooper Ave. in Ridgewood was recently denied its second liquor license in one year, as disc jockey Justin Carter hoped to open the factory as a music venue.

A man who identified himself as Carter, then later his assistant declined to comment on plans for the Ridgewood property.

Paul Kerzner, counsel for the Ridgewood Property Owners and Civic Association, said the building was last used as a factory and ill-equipped to host revelers.

"It doesn't have the basic hygienic needs there.

There are not enough bathrooms," he said. "It's shameful that people like this would actually try to hold these things... it would be totally irresponsible."

Neither Carter nor others involved with the application showed up at CB 5, Kerzner said.

Cooper Street Holdings, and its agent, Brooklyn developer Joseph Brunner, purchased the property for $4.675 million last September, city property records show.

It has not submitted paperwork for construction work since, according to the city Department of Buildings website.

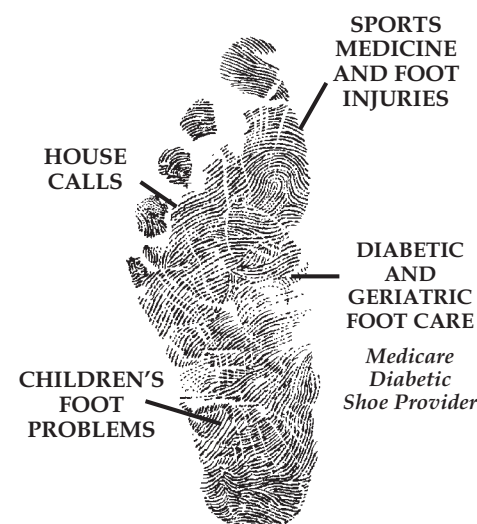

The real estate company did not return calls for comment.

CB 5 spent months fighting plans to transform a shuttered Maspeth glass factory into the Knockdown Center, an arts organization with licenses to host up to 5,000 and serve liquor. It argued the venue would strain the police precinct and disrupt nearby neighbors. The slate Liquor Authority denied the Knockdown Center's application in May.

But both Arcuri and Kerzner say the western Queens neighborhood's stock of unused manufacturing sites, proximity to the L and M trains and low

Benefit for Children with Asthma in Queens

Day of Soccer with Professional Players from New York Cosmos, Mini Golf and More at New York Hall of Science and Rocket Park

If you're a looking for a fun, family-friendly activity that will keep your kids moving, provide learning opportunities about science and health, and support a very worthy cause, come to Healthy Kids and Family Day at the New York Hall of Science and Rocket Park in Corona, Queens, on Sunday, Oct. 5, 2014, 12 p.m. – 4 p.m.!

There'll be soccer clinics with professional players from the New York Cosmos of the North American Soccer League, mini golf in Rocket Park, and open play and exploration of the more than 450 exhibits (many of which are interactive) at the Hall of Science.

Additional activities include balloon twisting and face painting, healthy living stations and refreshments. Participants will be eligible for gifts, prizes and a special drawing.

General admission is $35 per person (includes one drawing entry) or $125 for a group of four (includes one drawing entry for each guest and a discount on premium family membership at the New York Hall of Science). Children Under 2 Free!

Proceeds will benefit the New York Hospital Queens (NYHQ) Pediatric Asthma Center – for programs focused on improving the health of the nearly 50,000 children with asthma in the Queens community. So more children in Queens can breathe better, and participate fully in sports and daily activities.

Funds will support a peer mentoring program for teenagers living with asthma, interactive asthma education, and enable the NYHQ Pediatric Asthma Center to purchase and use new technology to improve the management of asthma. Examples include iPad/iPhone communications to encourage patients discharged from the emergency room to follow their treatment plans and sensor devices installed on patients' inhalers that enable doctors to track how a patient is following their treatment plan.

For more information about the NYHQ Pediatric Asthma Center, or to make an appointment with an NYHQ asthma specialist, visit www.nyhq.org/Pediatric_Asthma_Center or call (718) 670-1920.

New York Hospital Queens is a member of the New York-Presbyterian Healthcare System and is affiliated with Weill Cornell Medical College. For more information, visit www.nyhq.org.

Asthma: The most common chronic condition among children

Asthma, a lung disease that makes breathing difficult, affects nearly one in 13 school-age children nationally, and that rate is rising rapidly in preschool-aged children and those living in urban inner cities. In New York State, nearly 500,000 children have asthma. It's a leading cause of emergency room visits, hospitalizations, and missed school days.

Asthma is a serious disease, and can even be life threatening. Symptoms include: shortness of breath; chest tightness or pain; coughing, especially at night; and wheezing or a whistling sound when exhaling. While there is no cure, asthma can be managed with the help of a health care team.

A FUN DAY AWAITS YOU

Astoria roof garden beats Jersey: Brooklyn farmer

BY BILL PARRY

Astoria's first rooftop farm is planning a grand re-opening Monday from 6 p.m. to 9 after to mark its relocation after four years in Bushwick, Brooklyn.

Boswyck Farms is very different than the more established Brooklyn Grange rooftop farm in Long Island City because it uses hydroponic growing systems instead of soil.

"When I first started in hydroponics seven years ago, everyone was suspicious of it," Boswyck founder Lee Mandell said. "Now everyone embraces it because you can farm in any kind of space. It's the perfect system, far more conducive for the urban farmer, because space is such a premium. You get two to three times the production in a square foot of space using hydroponics as opposed to traditional soil farming."

Vegetables, such as lettuce, tomatoes, peppers, okra and beans, are grown in nutrient-enriched water. The farm's new location is at 38-01 23rd Ave. with 1,000-square-foot of outdoor space on the roof with an additional 2,300 square feet indoors for year-round growing under the lights. Mandell calls it a research and development facility.

"We are a research and educational farm teaching people how to grow their own food," Mandell said. "We also act as contractors designing systems and then training people how to use it."

The produce that is grown is used for marketing the farm's systems and services while the rest is given to food pantries and its new neighbors.

Boswyck Farms offers an intensive 35-hour course for Hydroponic Certification for $2,000 as well as workshops for farming hobbyists. Mandell plans to offer after-school programs beginning next year.

Boswyck is open to the public between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. Mondays and noon to 4 on Fridays. "Fridays are our volunteer days with positions available in design and construction, crop management and event support," Mandell said.

When he started farming in Brooklyn four years ago, Mandell named it Boswyck after the original Dutch settlement, which he does not plan on changing.

"I really liked Brooklyn but we outgrew our space, plus it became very expensive," he said. "After an exhaustive search we almost gave up and moved to New Jersey, and we didn't want to do that."

That's when fate intervened.

"One of my workers had a missed phone call and didn't recognize the phone number, so she googled it," Mandell said. "It turned out to be a real estate company and that led us to this place, can you imagine? What are the chances of that happening?"

Mandell moved his farm and his residence into the same building, saying that a farmer should always live on his farm.

"We've been welcomed into Astoria with open arms," he said. "Borough pride is a very real thing here in Queens. The people seem to like the idea that Brooklyn's loss was their gain."

St. Albans church gets approval for building

BY JUAN SOTO

The community opposition was not enough to prevent developers, which includes the church that owns the land, from erecting an affordable housing five-story building on Farmers Boulevard in St. Albans.

The city Board of Standards and Appeals approved Tuesday the zoning variances the developers were seeking to build the complex that will also house a community center in the ground floor.

The project had three votes in favor and one abstention. The board member who abstained explained she did not know enough about the proposed plan.

"The board seemed to be supportive of the plan," said a source familiar with the BSA hearings about the construction plans.

"I believe this is wrong," said Karen Plummer, president of the St. Albans Civic Improvement Association. "Too many people will move in and the neighborhood

The project calls for the construction of a five-story building in two empty lots along Farmers Boulevard.

can't sustain it."

The developers, including the St. Albans Presbyterian Church, needed variances involving maximum building height, maximum dwelling unit and minimum parking.

The project consists of a 67-unit structure of one- and two-bedroom apartments that will be built in two empty lots located on Farmers Boulevard between 118th and 119th avenues.

"This is just too much for us," Plummer said.

Once the decision becomes public, the people in the community who opposes the project will have 30 days to appeal.

The St. Albans Civic Improvement Association will hold a meeting to decide if it will appeal the decision by the BSA to allow for the 65,000-square-foot complex.

Community members said that, besides traffic congestion concerns, the new residents would have a negative impact on PS 15, PS 36 and IS 59 because these schools are already filled to capacity.

The neighborhood is basically made of two-story houses and is zoned for low, residential homes.

Some residents insisted the project "is not compatible" with the landscape of the neighborhood.

During one of the review sessions by the BSA, one member questioned the parking demand study forwarded by the developer, an analysis concluding that "31 percent of the residents of the area commute by subway, but there is no subway in the vicinity."

Community Board 12 approved the Westchester developer's project by a 19-9 margin, with eight abstentions.

At a summer rally, neighbors contended traffic congestion on Farmers Boulevard would be "hazardous to pedestrians" if the structure was erected.

They also said that as a result of the new businesses in the neighborhood, the boulevard "is consistently congested and more so at peak travel hours."

Plaza College

Plaza College officially opened its new state-of-the-art campus in Forest Hills five months after a fire engulfed the Jackson Heights building it once called home. (Clockwise from l.) My husband Freddie lived life with a tremendous spirit.
Thanks to Calvary, he left life the same way.

"My Freddie had a vivacious spirit and love for life. Brilliant and dynamic, as both an engineer and attorney, he challenged life's issues with gusto. So when terminal cancer relentlessly ripped through his body – and our souls – we were horrified to see him suffer. Then Calvary entered our lives. First, your Calvary Home Hospice team relieved his pain. Then when he needed the round-the-clock services of Calvary Hospital, you were there for us again. In his private room, you gave us time to be together as a family. Most importantly, you respected our Jewish faith and customs. For a few short weeks, Freddie was back! His final days were happy ones. Just the way we wanted to remember him. Thank you Calvary".

Forum publisher arrested in spat with neighbor: DA

BY ALEX ROBINSON

The publisher of a Howard Beach-based weekly newspaper was arrested last week after a roaring dispute with a neighbor, the Queens DA's office said.

Police booked Patricia Adams, of the Forum Newspaper, on charges of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest last Friday, after responding to a disturbance outside the publisher's house, according to the criminal complaint filed by the DA.

Adams had been engaged in an argument with her neighbor about garbage cans, which had been placed in her driveway, according to a law enforcement source.

When police arrived, Adams became irate and started to scream at the responding officers, causing a small crowd to gather in the neighborhood, the complaint said.

"Do you know who the f--- I am? I run the Forum," she allegedly yelled at police, according to the complaint. "I'm going to have your job. F--- you."

She then flailed her arms as police were trying to place her in handcuffs, the complaint said.

Adams could not be reached for comment.

The blowup was the culmination of a longstanding feud between the publisher and her neighbor, whose properties sit closely together without a fence between them, according to a source familiar with the battle between the two.

The quarrel first started when Adams accidentally backed her car out of her driveway and grazed her neighbors grass, the source said.

Since then, both parties have become increasingly petty over their property lines and the police had been called several times, often by Adams, to settle squabbles between the two, the source said.

Adams owns the Forum South, which covers Southern Queens and the Rockaway Beat.

The publisher helped start the Rockaway Times in the early summer, but has since parted ways with the newspaper and started the Rockaway Beat - a rival publication on the peninsula.

BOROUGH'S CREATIVITY ON DISPLAY

Queens Art Intervention Day celebrates all types of artistic expression in multiple neighborhoods

BY TAMMY SCILEPPI

Queens' cultural scene will reclaim the spotlight as things get downright edgy with unexpected happenings and creative jolts in the form of 30 public art installations and performance pieces which will pop up across the borough during Saturday's Queens Art Intervention Day.

The Rego Park Green Alliance Studio requested proposals from New Yorkers who had something creative to say and received more than 150 responses.

"RPGA is all about using creativity to address community issues. Some communities feel that they are not a part of the creative goings on. They feel like only some neighborhoods are seen as hubs of creativity," said Yvonne Shortt, the nonprofit's executive director. "We think this program will also bring economic development to the fabulous borough of Queens."

RPGA selected 30 projects for this weekend's pilot program, which Shortt, who started the group six years ago, hopes will become a yearly event.

Designed to address community issues and shake things up a bit, Queens-style, the unique projects — some whimsical but all with a message to share — were conjured by creative types, mostly from Queens, who have a desire to connect with the public.

Artist Blanka Amezkua hopes to gather Astoria residents together to create a piece called "Pipe Cleaner."

Amezkua, who lives in the Bronx, will begin on 31st Street around 11 a.m. and wander along Ditmars Boulevard depositing a trail of multi-colored pipe cleaners twisted together, like a post-modern Gretel sans Hansel, ending her journey under the Hell Gate Bridge around 2 p.m.

The final piece, which the artist called a message of hope, possibility and interconnectedness, will be donated to the Queens Library or another Astoria non-profit.

Shortt's group plans to present its cow installation titled "MooMoo."

"It draws attention to our past as a pastoral land, while looking at the present with its 3D printed hooves and ears," said Shortt. "She will be a pop-up installation around Queens in a variety of neighborhoods."

Another one of RPGA Studio's pieces is focused on changing behaviors of motorists, pedestrians and cyclists and the dangers along Queens Boulevard in Forest Hills.

Stat Girl, a super hero created by RPGA, will be in schools and on the streets giving out statistical data about dangerous intersections.

Another intervention to look for is FLOWAGE, which will appear at Travers Park Play Street in Jackson Heights between 10 a.m. - 2 p.m.

More than one way to see a movie in Queens

Borough teems with venues to catch specialized films and Hollywood hits outside the theaters

BY MERLE EXIT

Thomas Edison may have given birth to the movies in West Orange, N.J., but the medium came of age right here in Queens with the first Hollywood-style studios setting up shop in the borough.

Today Queens' connection to cinema continues to thrive with productions filmed at Kaufman Astoria and Silver Cup studios. But the borough also celebrates movies with screenings at a variety of venues beyond the local cineplex.

Naturally Astoria's Museum of the Moving Image serves as a hub for all things cinematic. Visitors can explore exhibits filled with costumes, sketches, makeup and posters from the last 100-plus years of movie history.

Through Oct. 17, MoMI holds a retrospective of Taiwanese filmmaker Hou Hsiao-hsien's works.

"He is considered one of the greatest living filmmakers of our time," said Tomoko Kawamoto, the museum's director of communications. "His films are rarely screened in the U.S. and difficult to see on DVD."

Mid-October brings the eighth annual New York City Greek Film Festival to Astoria with six new feature films and a special evening with director Pantelis Voulgaris.

"Highlights include the bittersweet romantic comedy 'Committed,' the taut thriller 'The Enemy Within' and 'September,' an unpredictable drama about a woman who seeks her neighbor's company after the death of her dog," said Kawamoto. "The festival's exciting lineup reflects the current renaissance in

The Marx Brothers, (l. to r.) Harpo, Chico, Zeppo and Groucho on the set of "The Cocoanuts" in 1929.

Greek cinema, with films that are receiving attention around the world."

The Greek Film Festival takes place Oct. 18, 19 and 22.

Other special events at MoMI this fall include Sunday's tribute to Jim Henson — who was born Sept. 24, 1936 — with the screening of "The Muppets Celebrate Jim Henson," from 1990, as well as a presentation from the Jim Henson Legacy's president, who will present rare TV appearances of the Muppets creator.

Oct. 7 brings Marlo Thomas, the creator of America's first modern female TV character in "That Girl," to the museum for a lively discussion moderated by Gloria Steinem. Tickets should be purchased in advance.

The Museum will pres-

Rockaway Theatre Co. finds its religion

Musical 'Godspell,' written by man behind 'Wicked,' brings Jesus' parables to tuneful life

"Godspell," the musical centering on the teachings of Jesus, opened on Broadway in 1971.

The story itself with various updates over the years remains a smash that warrants the skill of a Broadway tour group.

It finds that in the Rockaway Theatre Co.'s latest production.

"The script is quite open to interpretation in regards to the show's particular style of presentation," Director Frank Caiati writes in the program. "The performance you are about to see was created by many talented individuals both on stage and off, working many long hours, to create our 'Godspell.'"

Even if you have never seen the play or the movie, it is good to point out the performance is certainly worth the toll over the bridge to their location at Fort Tilden.

Through a series of skits and songs — written by Stephen Schwartz more than 30 years before his current phenomenon "Wicked" — the show retells a series of parables that describe Jesus' life and the principles most associated with him.

First Annual Celebrity Red Carpet Fundraiser Gala

There is a well-established support system in place for bereaved spouses and children of deceased, uniformed New York City employees, such as cops and firefighters. That's a good thing, but the options may be limited for the average family struggling with a similar tragedy.

The Rubinhaim Foundation hopes to amend the disadvantage by opening the nation's first free day care facility in Forest Hills, N.Y., for children trying to come to terms with the devastating loss of their mother or father. Angels Day Care Center will help widowed parents establish a stable environment for their children, while leading them through the painful transition to their new normalcy, pledge its founders, who encourage you to leave your own lasting imprint with a generous donation at a fundraiser on Oct.

7 to help finance the project construction — with a ground-breaking planned for the fall.

The red-carpet banquet at Da Mikele Illagio Palace, 79-17 Albion Avenue in Elmhurst, N.Y., promises to be a one-of-a-kind affair, sponsored by Manhattan's finest barbershops, Reamir & Co (reamir.com) and hosted by Z100's Skeery Jones, with an international feast prepared by master chef Mikele Zavolunov. A celebrity-studded line-up of stars and performances includes Dancing with the Stars ballroom battle winner, Allen Genkin and ballroom champion Amanda Spivack, the legendary Rose Sisters, Manolo the sound of Gipsy Kings, Nick Z from Comedy Central and Saturday Night Live, Kelly Bensimon of The Real Housewives of New York, and international instrumentalist Didula.

All eyes, of course, will be on the prize — a brand new Angels Day Care Center, where a highly qualified, specially trained staff will do its best to provide fragile children with a quality education, plus the sensitivity, understanding, and emotional support they deserve on their path to recovery and independence. An added boost? An on-site chef will prepare delicious, homemade, organic meals three times daily, so that young ones can nourish their mind, body, and spirit while they learn the support skills needed to cope with their lasting grief.

rah Wasserman's project is made up of hundreds of pairs of girls' shoes.

"This joyful and life celebrating installation represents my respect, admiration and love for women — small and little — worldwide," said Wasserman.

A mother with two daughters, Wasserman saved every single pair of shoes they have worn since birth.

"For me, these shoes serve as a metaphor for their growth and mine, as well as our walk through time," she said. "The shoes track the growth of my children and represent the journey in time and space that they are taking, as they continually grow and mature."

ent a Family Day on Saturday, Oct. 18, with added programs for kids of all ages, including animation activities and workshops, a family scavenger hunt, and family-friendly introductions to the exhibition.

Over at the Queens Museum, the borough's only LGBT film series, Cinemarosa, is on hiatus until co-founder and curator Hector Canonge returns to New York later this fall.

"Hector has been awarded numerous international residences and has been traveling around the world making interactive performance work," said Prerana Reddy, the museum's director of public programs and community engagement. "We both hope to revive the monthly Cinemarosa series here at the museum. We don't have exact dates yet to announce, but we at the museum certainly look forward to its return, as well as the return of the local LGBT community, which had been regularly convening here for the series."

The museum has announced this Saturday's programming of films related to the recent Climate Change Convergence held in the city last weekend.

While individuals from the artist collective Not An Alternative lead visitors through the museum's Panorama and New York City's watershed model to address how climate change might affect the city landscape, related films, such as "Climate Change in an Urban Panorama," "The Sky is Pink" and "What the Frack Are You Drinking?" will be screened and discussed.

And while the library might not be the first place you think of to check out a movie, in Queens patrons have dozens of chances to catch classic films and some recent releases for free.

"Prior to the past year, we could only screen movies on rare occasion because libraries had to pay a very high fee to do a public screening," said the Queens Library Spokeswoman Joanne King. "Last year, we were able to obtain a group license to show many movies, including some recent releases, and the number of movie-related programs has increased dramatically. Our customers enjoy them very much."

Although the license agreement precludes the library from advertising the names of the films, there are plenty of options catered to everyone's tastes.

The schedule includes showings Mondays at 3 p.m. at the Sunnyside branch, 43-06 Greenpoint Ave.; Wednesdays at 2 p.m. at the Glen Oaks facility, 256-04 Union Turnpike; Wednesdays at 6 p.m. at the Central Library, 89-11 Merrick Blvd.; Thursdays at 2 p.m. at the Central Library and Saturdays at 2 p.m. in Far Rockaway.

"Films are a great way to entertain and engage Queens Library's customers. No matter your background, we can all enjoy and have an opinion about a movie," said Kelvin Watson, Queens Library's vice president of digital services and strategy. "When choosing films for viewing, Queens Library looks for high-quality films that will be popular and stimulate conversation. And there's nothing wrong with plain old entertainment."

Movies for all ages are scheduled at branches across the borough, for information, go to www.queenslibrary.org.

'Godspell'

A dark warehouse is broken into, flashlights bringing both the performers onto the stage as well as the six musicians to their area (pretty drawn out) when someone finally pulls the light switch. Crates are moved around and whatever lies about become the sets and props.

The warehouse door itself is the backdrop of the set, where Jesus (Matt Smilardi) enters. Only John the Baptist and Judas (both played by John Panepinto) are depicted. The other cast members are dressed in a mish-mash of styles and clothing from various eras.

With most of the theater groups of this nature, it is important to point out the flawlessness of the singing, acting and choreography, alone.

The audience also gets into the act.

At Saturday's performance cast members drafted a somewhat elderly Rita Nanes, who was surprised not only to find herself taking quick acting lessons while reading from a piece of paper, but was also directed to lie down on the floor as well as having to hold up her hands for a period of time.

High energy reigned throughout the performance due to the enthusiasm of the characters until the end when we view "The Last Supper" and Jesus' death upon a warehouse piece not shaped as a cross. Great set as Jesus rises and walks up to the warehouse door. It opens to reveal foggy bright light.

Why end on a low note when you can now invite the audience to come up onto the stage and join the cast in singing the most popular number from the show, "Day By Day?"

Some of the bits thrown in were a part of the song "Thriller," a Comfort Inn commercial, Loonytunes and a line from "The Lion King," all commanding a few laughs.

Godspell will be performing through Sept. 28. Rockaway Theatre Company's next production, "Damn Yankees," will take place the middle of November.

said. Volunteers said a long line for food packages formed earlier in the day for food packages, something Rapaport is hoping to put an end to.

“We want people to eat in dignity,” Rapaport said. “We don’t want people to wait in line for food on the street, but the demand is so overwhelming that we aren’t winning the battle of not having a bread line. There are just so many people that need food.”

The City Council allocated $105,000 to Masbia in fiscal year 2015, including $25,000 from the speaker’s fund, but this only made up a small portion of the nonprofit’s $2 million budget. Government monies account for less than 40 percent of the money the organization needs, with a majority of funding coming from private donations, Rapaport said.

The Council’s funding was part of a larger effort to tackle shortages at the city’s food banks by distributing a total of $1.3 million to soup kitchens, pantries and other organizations that feed those in need. Roughly half of the city’s food banks had to turn away people seeking meals in 2013 because of a lack of resources.

“The Council is proud to sponsor hunger relief organizations such as Masbia across the five boroughs,”

Mark-Viverito said. “Masbia plays an especially crucial role in ensuring that all New Yorkers have access to kosher meals, and I think Masbia and my colleagues for their continued dedication to fighting hunger in New York City.”

Mark-Viverito and her colleagues took turns loading onions into food packages and delivering trays to people in the dining room.

“Our mission is to feed everyone,” Rapaport said. “We happen to be kosher, but our mission is to feed all of New York’s hungry.”

world on this,” Constantinides said. “INT. 378 provides our city with a mandate to hasten our response to the climate change in a meaningful way. This new paradigm will encourage innovation, technological progress and legislation to continue our movement towards a more sustainable and resilient city.”

The plan would demand all public buildings be retrofitted to improve energy efficiency, expand the use of solar panels and provide financing help for clean energy improvements. The city will try to make private property owners do the same and if they don’t, Mayor de Blasio said, “We’ll work with them, we’ll incentivize, we’ll support. If that is not moving fast enough, we will move to mandates, because we have to get there. This is a matter of survival.”

The mayor made his comments during an impromptu press gathering following Sunday’s march.

“We are now the largest city on earth to adopt the 80-by-50 standard. My hope is that New York City’s example will resonate and build real momentum,” he said.

On Tuesday, the mayor helped open the United Nations Climate Summit by delivering a three-minute speech that urged the people of the world to change their ways for the sake of the planet.

“We know humanity is facing an existential threat,” he said. “The cause is us, how we heat our homes, how we transport ourselves, the reckless way in which we live. This is an issue we all face. No one is spared. And our mutual need to survive should instill in us a kind of unity we so rarely experience.”

Constantinides added that Hurricane Sandy gave everyone in New Yorkers a preview of the dangers of climate change.

“New York City saw it all firsthand,” he said. “Here we are nearly two years later and we’re still feeling the effects.”

Following the People’s Climate Change March, de Blasio agreed that Sandy was a wake-up call.

“Sandy made it personal, made it immediate, added a sense of reality to this dynamic,” the mayor said. “There are other storms ahead, and they could be much worse, and our job is to fundamentally change the dynamic. And we have the power to do so. It will take radical change. It will take many sacrifices. But it can be done and it has to be done.”

were seized for operating illegally.

There are 464 commuter vans licensed in the city and 48 licensed commuter vans operators. Out of the 48, 36 are based in Queens.

The popular “dollar vans” take people around in areas underserved by public transportation and are widely used in south-east Queens.

Commuters usually take these vans in downtown Jamaica for about $2 a trip as a much faster way to get to neighborhoods like Rochdale, Springfield Gardens, Laurelton and Rosedale after a long day at work.

CityCouncilmanDonovan Richards (D-Laurelton) said in a statement, “New Yorkers have the right to clean, reliable, and most important safe commute” in public transportation.

“I look forward to working closely with transportation advocates, the TLC, DOT, the NYPD, and the van companies to formulate a solution that enforces compliance with the same standards that apply for transportation across the city,” Richards said.

Miller insisted in a moratorium “for all commuter van renewal and approval applications until it has been determined that the TLC is up to task of meeting the legal and safety standards that our community deserves.”

the special effects demonstration. “They had a rainstorm on one side of the street and a snowstorm on the other -- that was really cool.”

Kelly from the Bronx said, “I had no idea they had a full-blown movie studio in Queens. It’s really pretty amazing to see.”

“New York On Location” reminded a young Manhattan couple, Michael and Bronwyn, of their home in Los Angeles.

“We’re both actors from L.A., so it’s a trip seeing a big gated film studio like this on the East Coast,” Michael said.

Nearly 7,500 visited the Museum of Moving Image next door, where the galleries were free all day. The film “Lights, Camera, Astoria!” was screened and there was a martial arts demonstration in the George S. Kaufman Courtyard.

Throughout the Kaufman Art District, food trucks served up the type of fare that is provided on location. State Sen. Michael Gianaris (D-Astoria) vouched for the sandwich he got from a Startruck Catering and Treat truck.

“It’s called a Fat Pig Sandwich and it has roast pork, ham, bacon and garlic mayo—it’s delicious,” Gianaris said. “This is a great event and hopefully it’s a sign of more to come. We live with the economic benefits this studio provides everyday. This is a way for the public to see what it’s all about.”

The co-founders of the advocacy group, Dr. Laura Newman and Cristina Furlong, issued a statement saying, “There is only so much shock, sadness, and disbelief a community can feel before the impetus for change grabs hold. When it grabs hold of a small army of parents, a community may never be the same.

Make Queens Safer was born this way.”

The Justice for Hit and Run Victims Act will go into effect 90 days after it is signed by Mayor Bill de Blasio, which he is expected to do as part of his Vision Zero initiative.

Paul Steely White, the executive director of Transportation Alternatives said, “Hitting someone with a car and then fleeing the scene is one of the most heinous crimes. Hit-and-run drivers leave victims exposed and without treatment in the street, they leave investigators without key information, and they leave families feeling that they’ve been denied closure. This bill will help deliver aid and justice to crash victims as quickly as possible and deter reckless driving and prevent crashes in the first place.”

A mass, in memory of Luis Bravo, will be held on Sunday, Sept. 28 at 1:30 p.m. at Blessed Sacrament Church, at 34-43 93rd Street, in Jackson Heights.

crime rates are sure to continue to attract night life businesses.

“I’m sure this is not the last time we’re going to be hit with this,” Kerzner said. “This kind of fly-by-night operation is occurring in many parts of the city where there are vacancies... Promoters just rent it for a couple of hours or a couple of days and they make a couple of big bucks.”

Sunnyside

Railroad magnate Jay Gould built a private tennis club for the rich on the site in the late 1800s and his descendants sold it to developers who opened the sporting arena in 1945.

“That’s when all our GIs were coming back from World War II,” Ring 8 President Bob Duffy said. “So many professional fighters had to put their careers on hold during the war. This is where they came to restart things and it revitalized the whole neighborhood. The crowds would fill the restaurants and bars all around here on fight night.”

The neighborhood was more rough-and-tumble back then. “You had this bar called Gildea’s around the corner and the boxers and their fans would go their afterwards,” United Forties President Don McCallian said. “The old saying was if you were too late for the fight card at the arena, you go there because the undercard would get started after the third round of drinks.” Longtime Sunnyside resident George Kowalski remembered steering clear of Gildea’s as a young man. “That place was a bucket of blood,” he said. “The owner John was the scariest man in the neighborhood. He had meathooks for hands and he was never shy about using them.”

McCallian remembers something more intimidating at the arena.

“They used to have Bingo here and that was a very big deal for the ladies,” he said. “God forbid you made too much noise and they couldn’t hear the numbers getting called. Oh boy, you’d be in serious trouble with them then.”

Sunnyside Gardens Arena also hosted a campaign rally for presidential candidate John F. Kennedy in 1960, a highly competitive industrial basketball league and women’s roller derby. Lifelong Sunnyside resident Leonore Lanzillotti skated with The Chiefs, but only for a short while. “When my father found out about it, he said no daughter of mine is doing roller derby,” she said. “The girl that replaced me smashed her face very badly crashing into the rail. I thought it safer to go into entertainment.”

Lanziollotti went on to star in the City Opera Company and perform with the Guy Lombardo Orchestra. Her father was legendary state Sen. Carlo Lanzillotti, who had his own street-naming just a few blocks away in 2012.

Dave Diamante, the public address voice of Brooklyn’s Barclays Center for Nets games and boxing events, was on hand to emcee the ceremony Saturday.

“There are so many historic places that are no more in this city, from Yankee Stadium to CBGBs to this place right here,” he said. “Folks will see this sign and go home and look it up and learn the history of what happened before this place was a Wendy’s when we went from black eyes to Biggie Fries.”

pair a structure with about 15 years of use left, according to a June 2014 letter from the city Department of Design and Construction to DOT.

“It is clear to us, based on a full review of the consultant reports, that the DOT had a choice to repair or demolish the structure and DOT chose to demolish,” the elected officials’ letter read. “The efficient functioning and operation of the Criminal Court and the Supreme Court would be severely hampered by DOT’s proposed immediate closure... the summons part alone attracts almost 80,000 litigants a year to Borough Hall, not to mention the numerous attorneys and family members who accompany the litigants.”

the idea. “We would have to have long discussions about infrastructure and roadway upgrades.”

Neither the mayor’s office nor Port Authority returned requests for comment.

Similarly, Ozone Park Civic Association President Howard Kamph said any uptick in traffic concerned him.

“There’s only one train line. There is no major roadways there but the Belt Parkway. The Van Wyck is already bad,” he said. “There is only one road into the casino.”

Resorts World declined to comment.

The development would likely go through the Uniform Land Use Review procedure, which sends proposals to the relevant community board for discussion, the borough president for recommendations, the City Planning Commission for approval and then the City Council for a vote. Typically, legislators defer to the lawmaker who represents the district in question — in this case City Councilman Eric Ulrich (R-Ozone Park).

In a statement, Ulrich said he was open to the stadium.

“A soccer stadium would create jobs, stimulate economic development and make Queens the city’s premier sports destination,” he said. “I will be working closely with the community and my fellow elected officials to see if the proposed site in my district is the right fit before making a final decision.”

Borough President Melinda Katz said she would welcome a stadium to Queens, but was unsure if the Aqueduct lot was an appropriate location.

“I don’t have the information necessary to take a position,” she said. “What’s the cost? Are they paying for it? ... How are we going to deal with the traffic? Is the MTA going to be involved with the subway?”

Because Aqueduct uses the parking lot, the state’s Franchise Oversight Board would have to approve the move, according to Lee Park, a spokesman for the state Gaming Commission.

Lee said the board did not know much about stadium plans yet.

with the Entrepreneur Space, the kitchen incubator run by the Queens Economic Development Corp.

“We cook our menu and do all of our food preparation at the E-Space,” Lexington said.

The Fortune Society also teaches a culinary art class at the venue and some of the students in training will work on the truck.

“The workers are between the ages of 16 and 26 and they do rotations of six to eight months,” Lexington said. “Two have already transitioned to full-time jobs and one went back to school.”

Lexton calls the Snowday Food Truck a vehicle for social justice where young people with criminal histories can live crime-free, with bright futures full of opportunity.

“We recruit them when they get out and we help them stay out,” she said.

The food that is served from the truck is made of ingredients sourced mostly from New York state and local urban farms. Lexington developed the maple-themed menu based on French-Canadian cooking. It was on a trip to Canada that she was inspired not just for the menu but for the name of the truck.

“The whole idea of a snow day represents the ultimate joy and freedom,” she said. “That’s what we strive to create for the crew.”

torney Richard Brown and other elected and court officials wrote Mayor Bill de Blasio Sept. 18 requesting that his administration reconsider plans to close the Queensboro Hall Municipal Parking Garage Oct. 1. They noted consultants previously had said perilous portions of the parking garage could be closed for repairs while other areas remained open to drivers. The Queens officials argued this would have been easier to grapple with than giving two weeks’ notice before shutting a garage largely serving Queens Supreme Court and the civic hall visitors.

“Closing the Muni Lot will decrease the precious available public parking for two of the busiest government buildings in the borough by nearly 500 spots in an area that is undergoing extensive construction, has a busy public school and where there is no available street parking,” the letter said.

The mayor’s office did not respond to requests for comment.

Consultants’ February 2014 study of the garage notes it has not had significant repairs since 1985. The concrete was split and cracked, particularly beneath the roof, which has defective drains, the report said. Similarly a broken elevator, impassable stair towers and cracked asphalt were highlighted.

The consultants estimated it would be more cost effective to demolish the garage than to pay roughly $44 million to re-ing equipment meets the standards expected to last another century.

Hours after Meeks touted the funding outside the Staten Island ferry terminal in downtown Manhattan, close to 30 gathered there Monday evening to rally for the funding necessary to continue running the Rockaway ferry after Oct. 31, according to Michael O’Reilly. That a portion of the federal funding was bound for the construction of ferry boats and terminals for the Staten Island service was not lost on the protestors.

“I find it interesting that our own Congressman Meeks and Sen. Schumer have been tenacious in securing $190 million to help fund the Staten Island ferry and have been silent in helping Rockaway and Brooklyn in their ferry,” said O’Reilly, a Broad Channel resident who rides the Rockaway ferry to work in Manhattan. “I was absolutely shocked — $190 million, 1 percent of that would fund our ferry for a year, or maybe 2 percent.”

Meeks said the grants only applied to capital construction projects, not operation costs, as were needed in Rockaway.

But he said he would continue trying to convince Mayor Bill de Blasio the ferry was worth funding and explore how he may be able to secure some of the remaining Sandy-related federal capital construction money for the city, in exchange for it transferring funding to the Rockaway route. Money for the ferry did not make it into the city’s budget.

Holy Cross faces toughest season

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI

In the preseason Tom Pugh called this season's early slate of games the hardest he had faced in his 41 years coaching Holy Cross football. It's turned out to be exactly that.

"It is obviously," Pugh said of his preseason remarks. "I was not kidding."

The Knights have now lost their first three games, including the CHSFL league opener, 49-7, to host Archbishop Stepinac Saturday afternoon. Things won't get much easier with a trip to league power St. Anthony's next week before the Knights host rival St. Francis Prep on Oct. 4.

"We got to get our troops together and get ready for the push at the end," Pugh said.

Holy Cross was without star receiver Ahamed Bah. He missed two practices leading up to the contest and by team rule had to sit. Injuries to key players only magnify mistakes. Quarterback Joshua Evans hurting his hand in the first half and senior linebacker

Chris Manfre needed to ice his elbow.

"We have a hard schedule already," senior receiver Paul Yodice said. "We only make it harder on ourselves."

The Knights nearly picked up a big play early in the second quarter. Yodice's option pass to an open Jason Vargas was dropped. The play was the first after Cross recovered a fumbled punt on its own 28-yard line, down just 7-0.

"It may be a different ball game," Pugh said. "You have one chance to take a shot to get you 7-7 and we didn't get it."

Cross' lone score, a 1-yard touchdown run by Edwin Villegas, was on the opening drive of the second half to help make it 28-7. It was set up by the second successful fake punt of the season as Yodice hooked up with Jeremiah Nelson for 41 yards yard.

The team's seniors understand it is their job to keep this group upbeat moving forward despite the rough start.

Newtown unbeaten in A East

Pioneers hold their own after switching to another PSAL division

BY PATRICK MCCORMACK

Newtown is making itself right at home in Queens A East division

The Pioneers boys' soccer team remained unbeaten in league play by defeating visiting Francis Lewis 2-0 Tuesday afternoon. Newtown was moved from Queen A West as part of the division realignment by the PSAL.

Pioneers coach Eric Wozniak sees every victory in the new league as important because of the tough competition the team faces from the likes of history proud programs like Lewis, Bayside and Cardozo. Newtown went 7-3-2 last year and lost in the third round of the playoffs

"It's the first time for us playing in the East Division," Wozniak said. "Every game is a battle and every opponent is tough, so every win is a big win for us."

It earned it with plenty of help from star Anthony Baltazar. He received a pass from Aldo Hernandez and broke free all by himself. Baltazar beat Francis Lewis goalkeeper Kevin Egger to give Newtown a 1-0 advantage in the 30th minute. It was this 13th goal of the season in six games.

"Anthony is a machine," Wozniak said. "Everything goes through him. Everyone knows about Anthony at this point. He is a positive player and our best player by far."

The junior also created two other chances after his goal, but he fired one wide and the other went over the net. Newtown added an insurance goal in the 51st minute. Lobsang Tenzin was taken down in the box and was awarded a penalty kick. The senior took advantage of the opportunity by beating Juan Diego Lopez, who replaced Eggers in the second half. Tenzin was happy to help his team against Lewis (3-2).

"It was a wonderful feeling to score my first goal of the season," he said. "Everyone is working hard and we have support, so it helps. Everyone is giving 100 percent."

The two goals were all the Pioneers needed in front of keeper Hussein Saleh, who came up big in the final 10 minutes. The senior started in the 80th minute when he stopped Julian Cabanillas, who ripped a shot at the top of the box.

Two minutes later on a corner kick, Arturo Rodas' header was stopped and at the 85th minute Saleh stopped his fellow goalie Lopez, who came up on a throw in from 20 yards out. Saleh, who was the

Royals' historic enshrinement salutes program

More than the 1993 Christ the King girls' basketball team was inducted into the New York City Basketball Hall of Fame last week.

This special group of players, which claimed one of the Royals' five mythical national titles, goes in as the first-ever female club to enter the Hall of Fame. The club did so alongside former CK star Craig 'Speedy' Claxton, Rice and St. John's University standout Felipe Lopez and Brooklyn Tech start Charlie Davis.

"It means a lot to the team," legendary Christ the King coach Vincent Cannizzaro said. "It means a lot to the sport."

The Middle Village school has accolades unmatched during its two decades of dominance. Christ the King won 10 straight New York State Federation titles at the highest classification and 15 overall. It has also claimed 27 of the last 30 Brooklyn/Queens diocesan crown. The program's link to that past continues with Cannizzaro's former assistants, Bob Mackey, now the head coach, and Jill Cook, still running things in Middle Village.

The Royals were a trendsetting-program as they took off by traveling out of state regularly for games against national opponents and by starting an elite travel program in the Liberty Belles in 1987. They were also the first women's team in the country to earn a sneaker deal, at first with Adidas and now Nike.

"I think it was hard for them to choose which team to honor," said Tammi McGlynn-Piazza, the lone returning starter on the 1993 club, of the Hall of Fame. "Any team that you picked, you wouldn't have gone wrong."

There were reasons her team was special and the biggest one was the presence of future Tennessee and WNBA star Chamique Holdsclaw as a sophomore. It was the breakout season for the first of the Mount Rushmore players in the program's history, with Sue Bird and Tina Charles to follow. Holdsclaw, one of the most recognizable names in women's hoops, started just one game as a freshman, before coming into her own that season.

"I think it helped that Chamique was on our team," said McGlynn-

Piazza, who later played at Fairfield and George Washington. "She was always compared to the Michael Jordan of basketball."

Holdsclaw was just one of five hungry future Division-I players in the starting lineup on a team that did not return a lot of experience. Center Malika Willis (Georgetown), point guard Jo-Jo Guzman (Pittsburgh) and shooting guard Keisha McFagion (Arizona State) all played major roles in bringing the national title back to Middle Village. One loss kept the Royals from earning the honor the year prior.

"It didn't surprise me how good they could play because we knew they had made a positive contribution the year before on a team that finished No. 2 in the country," said Vinny Cannizzaro, who coached the Royals along from 1981-1999.

By inducting the Royals' 1993 team the Hall of Fame enshrined much more than just that group's players and coaches. They represent something much bigger, one of the nation's most famous programs, regardless of gender.

"Any where you go you say you play for Chris the King, it's an honor," McGlynn-Piazza said. "People look up to you."

Christ the King picks up big win over Fordham Prep

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI

Christ the King is giving people reasons to take notice. The biggest so far was an impressive 21-7 victory against Fordham Prep in a CHSFL game Saturday night at Jack Coffey Field. It's arguably the program's biggest win since current Syracuse senior quarterback Terrel Hunt played under center in Middle Village and is the first league victory for first year-coach Jason Brown.

Fordham Prep traditionally plays at the league's highest level, while Christ the King has been in the lower tier. The Royals are off to a 2-1 start, with their lone loss coming to Fieldston in overtime. They hope the victory against Fordham Prep opens people's eyes and makes them realize they are a better team than in years past.

"It's going to be a big thing for us as a team," junior quarterback David Navas said of beating the Rams. "Teams have always slept on us. It just gives us more confidence."

Christ the King set the tone early when junior Kareem Davis ran the opening kickoff back 70 yards to help give the Royals a quick 7-0 lead. He said he cut the ball back left and hit the hole up the sideline to energize his team.

"We are already hyped going into the game, but after that it just made us play 10 times better," Davis said.

The score held up until third quarter, thanks to the CK defense. Davis made the biggest play. He intercepted starting quarterback Michael Wagner in the end zone with the Rams trying to go in from the 1-yard line in the second quarter.

Angel Ortiz also ended two Rams drives with sacks, including one on fourth and 8 from the Christ the King 36-yard line just before halftime.

Fordham Prep eventually got even when backup quarterback Matt Valencce hit Wagner for a 21-yard touchdown pass to make it 7-7 with 4:34 remaining in the third quarter. The Royals responded on their next play from scrimmage when Navas connected with Jamen Williams over the middle and the senior raced into the end zone for a 68-yard touchdown. He broke two tackles over the final 10 yard to help give CK a 14-7 advantage. Navas complete eight of nine passes for 188 yards.

"Navas was on varsity as a freshman," Brown said. "Navas this is his year. He's used to this."

It appeared the Rams would get one more chance to rally with 7:00 to go in the contest, but were called for roughing the kicker on the punt. CK got the ball back for a drive that ended with Navas connecting with Marcus Layne for a 36-yard score to seal the win.

Brown, an alum, wants to get his players used to winning at a program where that has not been the case in recent years. The former varsity assistant and JV coach took over Tyree Addison. The players said he is stressing discipline and accountability by sitting players who don't live by the rules.

"I want the program to go in the right direction," Brown said. "It is going to take a while to rebuild."

It hasn't taking long for CK fine early success however and they hope the rest of league is taking notice of their talent.

“It’s going to be a difficult job to keep everybody’s head up, especially now,” Yodice said. “Tough game next week. We are just going to have to ride it out to see how it goes.”

Bayside 46, Lane 14: Charles Flugg completed 11 of 15 passed for 227 yards and six touchdowns to five different receivers for Bayside (4-0). Camrhan Tillman had two catches for 70 yards and two scores. He also recovered two fumbles.

Jamaica 11, John Adams 8: Garfield McDonald carried the ball 17 times for 123 yards and a touchdown for Jamaica (3-1). Errol James ran for the lone score for John Adams

Bryant 22, Alfred E

Smith 0: John Duru rushed for 100 yards and a touchdown on six carried for Bryant (2-1). Jovon Hooks Williams and Raheem Williams combined for 112 yards and a touchdown a each on the ground.

Eagles Academy II 40, Far Rockaway 6: Maxwell Zarnoch went 4 of 6 passing for 70 yards and a 50-yard touchdown to Cyrus McDuffie for Far Rockaway (1-2). Dashaun Royal had 4 interceptions.

team’s third string goalie last season, has impressed Wozniak.

“What he is doing is amazing me. He is a leader back there,” he said. “He is making some tremendous saves, and he has been a brick wall for us.”

Despite not finding the back of the net, Francis Lewis coach Roger Sarmuksnis sees his team coming together as the season moves long.

“When you get back to playoffs, it’s all zero-zero. Sarmuksnis said. “We may struggle a little bit in the season this year, but I guarantee you this will be a good playoff team.”

Newtown has two more games before theygo up against also undefeated Bayside at home on Oct. 6 with first place possibly on the line. The teams played to a 2-2 tie in their first meeting. Newtown isn’t getting ahead of itself.

“We are worried about Bowne to be honest with you,” Wozniak said. “Bayside is very tough, but we are going to worry about our next opponent.

Terriers sweep Fontbonne in diocesan final

BY JOSEPH STASZEWSKI

St. Francis Prep quickly changed a tight, back-and-forth volleyball match into a rout. The reason: It was just time to turn it up.

“We knew we had to pick it,” senior middle hitter Jessica Vishnudat said. “It was just that time. You just have to start playing.”

The Terriers led by just a point midway through the second set after winning a close first one. From that point on St. Francis Prep looked like the defending CHSAA Class AA state champion. Its play was crisp all over the court and the team allowed just 10 more points to the visiting Bonnies en route to a 25-20, 25-13, 25-9 victory on Sept. 18 in a rematch of last year’s Brooklyn/Queens girl’s volleyball final. Terriers junior setter Christina Gabriel believed just one big play could give her team the energy it needs.

“Once that happens all of our hits, our digs, our sets they just become perfect and we feel unstoppable,” she said.

The Terriers (2-0) finished the second set on a 12-1 run, after trailing 9-8 early and leading just 13-12 at one point. Gabriel, who had 37 assists and seven digs, did a superb job spreading the ball around. Ann Marie Roberts had a hand in the first three points of the run and senior middle hitter Jessica Vishnudat (17 kills, nine digs) took it from there. Vishnudat had a kill and a then a block to put the set away. The Terriers carried that same level of play into a dominant third set.

“I think the whole team really did a great job picking it up,” SFP coach Kevin Colucci said. “So did Fontbonne. We were digging back and forth. Christina made some key sets to get the ball to the outside and middle and move the ball around well.”

Vishnudat is beginning to come into her own. She played behind a number of talented hitters during her career, including the recently graduated Jaclyn LaForgia and Caroline Gorecki. Vishnudat, who has help around her in the versatile Steph Bogda, Jillian Gratzner and Alana Davidson, admitted to be nervous coming into the season. That has not stopped her from putting her talent to good use.

“She stands out a lot more,” Colucci said. “Now she is more of a focus point.”

The Bonnies (1-1) were playing without star Francesca Castellano, who was sidelined with a herniated disc, but played valiantly in the first set behind Emily Greenstein. St. Francis Prep, which was aided by poor Fontbonne serving, led just 22-20 in the second. Vishnudat responded with two straight kills and combined on a block with Roberts to make sure the frame didn’t get away.

The Terriers lost eight seniors, including five starters from last year’s team that won the school’s first state title since it took home three straight crowns from 1984-86. This group is learning to handle the expectations of trying to win an eighth straight diocesan title and consecutive state crowns with an even bigger bull’s-eye on their backs. Performances like the one against Fontbonne will go a long way toward accomplishing those goals

“Right now if they play like that, they will be pretty successful,” Colucci said. “They have to outwork every team they play”

Leticia James Warns Consumers About Classified Ads

Toll numbers may be a direct line to trouble. Classified ads are intended to help people by facilitating communication and advertising available services; however, some of the hotlines & service numbers in classifieds actually hurt the people who rely on them by cheating them of their hard-earned dollars. "Most newspapers print a disclaimer in their classified ad section to warn readers about numbers that are a direct line to trouble. Any number starting with 900, 540, 595 or 871 charges a fee beyond a local call. In some instances, ads initially advertise calls to a local number, but then direct callers to a second number starting with one of the paid exchanges. "Consumers must also question the legitimacy of vague classifieds because they too could be a scam. Before responding to an ad, consumers should verify the source of all information & always be wary about sending money or signing a contract with an unknown party."

or within thirty (30) days after completion of service where service is made in any other manner, and in case of your failure to appear or answer, judgment will be taken against you by default for the relief demanded in the complaint.
NOTICE YOU ARE IN DANGER OF LOSING YOUR HOME If you do not respond to this summons and complaint by serving a copy of the answer on the attorney for the mortgage company who filed this foreclosure proceeding against you and filing the answer with the court, a default judgment may be entered and you can lose your home.
Speak to an attorney or go to the court where your case is pending for further information on how to answer the summons and protect your property. Sending a payment to your mortgage company will not stop this foreclosure action.
YOU MUST RESPOND BY SERVING A COPY OF THE ANSWER ON THE ATTORNEY FOR THE PLAINTIFF (MORTGAGE COMPANY) AND FILING THE ANSWER WITH THE COURT. The following notice is intended only for those defendants who are owners of the premises sought to be foreclosed or who are liable upon the debt for which the mortgage stands as security.
YOU ARE HEREBY PUT ON NOTICE THAT WE ARE ATTEMPTING TO COLLECT A DEBT, AND ANY INFORMATION OBTAINED WILL BE USED FOR THAT PURPOSE.
The present amount of the debt as of the date of this summons: $437,949.69 consisting of principal balance of $362,456.37 plus unpaid accrued interest of $3,285.78, escrow/impound shortages or credits of $1,900.68; MIP Insurance of $16,446.86; Servicing Fees of $1m820.00; Broker's Price Opinion/ Appraisal, Property Inspection and miscellaneous charges of $565.00; attorney fee $1,200.00 and title search $275.00. Because of interest and other charges that may vary from day to day, the amount due on the day you pay may be greater. Hence, if you pay the amount shown above, an adjustment may be necessary after we receive the check, in which event we will inform you. The name of the creditor to whom the debt is owed: LIVE WELL FINANCIAL, INC. Unless you dispute the validity of the debt, or any portion thereof, within thirty (30) days after receipt hereof, the debt will be assumed to be valid by the herein debt collector. If you notify the herein debt collector in writing within thirty (30) days after your receipt hereof that the debt, or any portion thereof, is disputed, we will obtain verification of the debt or a copy of any judgment against you representing the debt and a copy of such verification or judgment will be mailed to you by the herein debt collector. Upon your written request within 30 days after receipt of this notice, the herein debt collector will provide you with the name and address of the original creditor if different from the current creditor.

Note: Your time to respond to the summons and complaint differs from your time to dispute the validity of the debt or to request the name and address of the original creditor. Although you have as few as 20 days to respond to the summons and complaint, depending on the manner of service, you still have 30 days from receipt of this summons to dispute the validity of the debt and to request the name and address of the original creditor. TO THE DEFENDANTS, except: The Plaintiff makes no personal claim against you in this action. TO THE DEFENDANTS: If you have obtained an order of discharge from the Bankruptcy court, which includes this debt, and you have not reaffirmed your liability for this debt, this law firm is not alleging that you have any personal liability for this debt and does not seek a money judgment against you. Even if a discharge has been obtained, this lawsuit to foreclose the mortgage will continue and we will seek a judgment authorizing the sale of the mortgaged premises.

New York State Law requires that we send you this notice about the foreclosure process. Please read it carefully. Mortgage foreclosure is a complex process. Some people may approach you about "saving" your home. You should be extremely careful about any such promises. The State encourages you to become informed about your options in foreclosure. There are government agencies, legal aid entities and other non-profit organizations that you may contact for information about foreclosure while you are working with your lender during this process. To locate an entity near you, you may call the toll-free helpline maintained by the New York State Banking Department at 1-877-BANKNYS (1-877-226-5697) or visit the Department's website at www.banking.state.ny.us. The State does not guarantee the advice of these agencies.

the herein debt collector will provide you with the name and address of the original creditor if different from the current creditor. Note: Your time to respond to the summons and complaint differs from your time to dispute the validity of the debt or to request the name and address of the original creditor. Although you have as few as 20 days to respond to the summons and complaint, depending on the manner of service, you still have 30 days from receipt of this summons to dispute the validity of the debt and to request the name and address of the original creditor. TO THE DEFENDANTS: The Plaintiff makes no personal claim against you in this action. TO THE DEFENDANTS: If you have obtained an order of discharge from the Bankruptcy court, which includes this debt, and you have not reaffirmed your liability for this debt, this law firm is not alleging that you have any personal liability for this debt and does not seek a money judgment against you. Even if a discharge has been obtained, this lawsuit to foreclose the mortgage will continue and we will seek a judgment authorizing the sale of the mortgaged premises. York state Banking Department at 1-877-Bank-NYS or visit the Department's website at www.banking.state.ny.us FORECLOSURE RESCUE SCAMS Be careful of people who approach you with offers to "save" your home. There are individuals who watch for notices of foreclosure actions in order to unfairly profit from a homeowner's distress. You should be extremely careful about any such promises and any suggestions that you pay them a fee or sign over your deed. State law requires anyone offering such services for profit to enter into a contract which fully describes the services they will perform and fees they will charge, and which prohibits them from taking any money from you until they have completed all such promised services. CITATION GIVING NOTICE OF PETITION FOR TERMINATION OF A GUARDIAN OF AN INCAPACITATED PERSON Docket No. BR90P0353-MR Commonwealth of Massachusetts The Trial Court Probate and Family Court. In the Interests of: Elly Nurenburg formerly Of: SEEKONK, MA now of St. Albans, NY. RESPONDENT Incapacitated Person/Protected Person. Bristol Probate and Family Court Office of Register Suite 240 40 Broadway Street Taunton MA, 02780. To the named Respondent and all other interested persons, a petition has been filed by Glenda P Crookes of Canton, MA, Kathleen T Madigan of Canton, MA, in the above captioned matter requesting that the court: Terminate the Guardianship. The petition asks the court to make a determination that the Guardian and/ or Conservator should be allowed to resign; or should be removed for good cause; or that the Guardianship and/or Conservatorship is no longer necessary and therefore should be terminated. The original petition is on file with the court. You have the right to object to this proceeding. If you wish to do so, you or your attorney must file a written appearance at this court on or before 10:00 A.M. on the return date of 10/24/2014. This day is NOT a hearing date, but a deadline date by which you have to file the written appearance if you object to the petition. If you fail to file the written appearance by the return date, action may be taken in this matter without further notice to you. In addition to filing the written appearance, you or your attorney must file a written affidavit stating the specific facts and grounds of your objection within 30 days after the return date. IMPORTANT NOTICE The outcome of this proceeding may limit or completely take away the person's right to make decisions about personal affairs or financial affairs or both. The above-named person has the right to ask for a lawyer. Anyone may make this request on behalf of the above-named person. If the above-named person cannot afford a lawyer, one may be appointed at State expense. Witness, Hon. Anthony R Nesi, First Justice of this Court. Date: September 09, 2014. Gina L. DeRossi Register of probate.
